Moré's Antidote.

When a man shall, with a sober, fedate, diabolical rancour, look upon and enjoy himself in the sight of his neighbour's sin and shame, can he plead the infatigation of any appetite in nature?

South.

- To ENJOY. v. n. To live in happiness.

Then I shall be no more!

And Adam, wedded to another Eve,

Shall live with her enjoying, I extinct.

Milton.

- ENJOYER. n. f. [from enjoy.] One that has fruition or possession.

Dict.

- ENJOYMENT. n. f. [from enjoy.] Pleasure; happiness; fruition.

His hopes and expectations are bigger than his enjoyments.

Your hand

Gave sign for me to leave you: so I did,

Fearing to strengthen that impatience,

Which seem'd too much enkindled.

Shakspeare.

3. To incite to any act or hope.

Do you not hope your children shall be kings?

When those that gave the throne of Cawder to me,

Promis'd no less to them?

—That, trusted home,

Might yet enkindle you unto the crown.

Shakspeare.

- To ENLARGE. v. a. [largir, French.]

1. To make greater in quantity or appearance.

The wall, in lustre and effect like glass,

Which o'er each object casting various dyes,

Enlarges some, and others multiplies.

Pope.

2. To encase any thing in magnitude; to extend.

Where there is something both lasting and scarce, and so valuable to be hoarded up, there men will not be apt to enlarge their possessions of land.

Locke.

3. To increase by representation; to magnify; to exaggerate.

4. To dilate; to expand.

O ye Corinthians, our mouth is open unto you, our heart is enlarged.

2 Cor.

5. To let free from limitation.

Though he appear honest to me, yet at other places the envious let her mirth so far, that there is shrewd construction made of her.

Shakspeare.

6. To extend to more purposes or uses.

It hath grown from no other root than only a desire to enlarge the necessary use of the word of God, which desire hath begotten an error, enlarging it farther than fondness of truth will bear.

Hosier.

7. To amplify; to aggrandise.

This is that science which would truly enlarge mens minds, were it studied.

Locke.

Could the mind, as in number, come to so small a part of extension or duration as excluded divisibility, that would be the indivisible unit, or idea; by repetition of which it would make its more enlarged ideas of extension and duration.

Locke.

8. To release from confinement.

Enlarge the man committed yesterday,

That rail'd against our person.

Shakspeare.

9. To diffuse in eloquence.

They enlarged themselves upon this subject with all the invidious insinuations they could devise.

This is a theme so unpleasant, I delight not to enlarge on it; rather with the memory of it were extirpated.

Dec. of Pity.

- ENLARGEMENT. n. f. [from enlarge.]

1. Encrease; augmentation; farther extension.

The king afterwards enlarged the constant obedience of the city with enlargement both of liberties and of revenues.

Hoyw.

The ocean, which so long our hopes confin'd,

Could give no limits to his vaster mind:

Our bounds enlargement was his latest toil,

Nor hath he left us prisoners to our ill.

Waller.

There never were any islands, or other considerable parcels of land, amass'd or heaped up; nor any enlargement, or addition of earth, made to the continent by the mud that is carried down into the sea by rivers.

Woodward.

The commons in Rome generally pursued the enlargement of their power by more set quarrels of one entire assembly against another.

Swift.

The Greek tongue received many enlargements between the time of Homer and that of Plutarch.

Swift.

2. Release from confinement or servitude.

Lieutenant,

At our enlargement what are thy due fees?

Shak.

If thou holdest thy peace at the time, thou shalt there enlargement and deliverance arise to the Jews from another place.

Ejher.

Swift.

3. To make brightly or vivacious.

4. To make gay or cheerful in appearance.

ENLIVENER. n. f. [from enliven.] That which animates; that which puts in motion; that which invigorates.

But fire, th' enlivener of the general frame,

Is one, its operation still the same:

Its principle is in itself; while ours

Works, as confederates war, with mingled pow'rs.

Dryden.

- To ENLUMINE. v. a. [enluminer, French.] To illumine; to illuminate; to enlighten. See ILLUMINE.

For having yet, in his deduced spright,

Some sparks remaining of that heav'nly fire,

He is enlumin'd with that goodly light,

Unto like goodly semblance to aspire.

Spenser.

- ENMITY. n. f. [from enemy; as if enmity, inamity.]

1. Unfriendly disposition; malevolence; aversion.

Their being forced to their books, in an age at enmity with all restraint, has been the reason why many have hated books.

Locke.

2. Contrariety of interests or inclinations; mutual malignity.

They shall within this hour,

On a dissension of a doit, break out

In bitterest enmity.

Shakspeare.

Between thee and the woman I will put

Enmity; and between thine and her seed:

Her seed shall bruise thy head, thou bruise his heel.

Milton.

How far these controversies, and appearing enmities of those glorious creatures, may be carried, is not any business to shew or determine.

Dryden.

3. State of opposition.

Know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God?

James.

You must firmly be convinced, that every sin you commit sets

Nor hath he been so enrapt in those studies as to neglect the polite arts of painting, architecture, music, and poetry.

Arbutnot and Poje.

TO ENRAPTURE. v. a. [from rapture.] To transport with pleasure; to delight highly.

TO ENRAVISH. v. a. [from ravish.] To throw into extasy; to transport with delight.

What wonder,

Frail men, whose eyes seek heavenly things to see,

At fight thereof so much enravisht be?

ENRAVISHMENT. n. f. [from enravisht.] Extasy of delight.

They contract a kind of splendour from the seemingly obscuring veil, which adds to the enravings of her transported admirers.

TO ENRICH. v. a. [enricher, French.]

1. To make wealthy; to make opulent.

The king will enrich him with great riches, and will give him his daughter.

Henry is able to enrich his queen,

And not to seek a queen to make him rich.

The city, which thou feest, no other deem

Than great and glorious Rome, queen of the earth,

So far renown'd, and with the spoils enrich'd

Of nations.

Those are so unhappy as to rob others, without enriching themselves.

2. To fertilise; to make fruitful.

See the sweet brooks in silver meads creep,

Enrich the meadows, and supply the deep.

3. To store; to supply with augmentation of any thing desirable.

There is not any one among them that could ever enrich his own understanding with any certain truth, or ever edify others therein.

ENRICHMENT. n. f. [from enrich.]

1. Augmentation of wealth.

2. Amplification; improvement by addition.

I have procured a translation of that book into the general language, not without great and ample additions, and enrichment thereof.

flames and tortures, and will hereafter entitle many to the reward of actions which they had never the opportunity of performing.

Addison.

He entitled himself to the continuance of the divine protection and goodness, by humiliation and prayer.

Asterbury.

Thus hardly even is the penitent sinner saved; thus difficult is that duty, by which alone he can be reconciled to his Creator, and entitled to the mercies of the gospel.

Rogers.

5. To grant any thing as claimed by a title.
This is to entitle God's care how and to what we please.

ENTITLY. n. f. [entitle, low Latin.]

1. Something which really is; a real being.

Dear hope! earth's downy and heaven's debt,

The entity of things that are not yet:

Subtlest, but surest being.

Fortune is no real entity, nor physical essence, but a mere relative signification.

Crashaw.

God's decrees of salvation and damnation both Romish and reformed assix to mens particular entities, absolutely considered, without any respect to deamons.

Hommond.

Here entity and quiddity

The souls of defunct bodies fly.

Hudibras.

2. A particular species of being.

All eruptions of air, though small and slight, give an entity of sound, which we call crackling, puffing, and spitting; as in bay salt and bay leaves, call into the fire.

Bacon.

3. ENTITLY. v. a. [from titill.] To enlure; to intangle; to bring into toils or acts.

He cut off their land forces from their ships, and entitled

The cry went once for thee,

And yet it may again,

If thou would'st it not entomb thyself alive,

And ease thy reputation in a tent.

Shakespeare.

They within the beast's vast womb,

The choice and flow'r of all their troops entomb.

ENTRAILS. n. f. without a singular. [entrails, Fr. viscra.]

1. The intestines; the bowels; the inward parts; the guts.

What, hath thy fiery heart to parch'd thine entrails,

That not a tear can fall?

As for the entrails, they are all without bones; save that a bone is sometimes found in the heart of a stag, and it may be in some other creature.

Bacon.

The earth hath loft

Most of her ribs, as entrails; being now

Wounded no less for marble than for gold.

I fear that harden'd heart from out her breast,

Which with her entrails makes my hungry hounds a feast.

2. The internal parts; recess; caverns.

A precious ring that lightens all the hole,

And shews the ragged entrails of this pit.

He had brought to light but little of the treasure, that lay so long hid in the dark entrails of America.

3. ENTRAIL. v. a. To mangle; to interweave; to diversify.

Over him, art striving to compare

With nature, did an arbor green dispart,

Framed of wanton ivy, flow'ring fair,

Through which the fragrant eglantine did spread,

His pricking arms entraid with roses red.

Spenser.

Made of fine twigs, entraid curiously,

In which they gather'd flowers.

ENTRANCE. n. f. [entrant, French.]

1. The power of entering into a place.

Whence are you, sir? Has the porter his eyes in his head, that he gives entrance to such companions? Pray, get you out.

Shakespeare.

Where diligence opens the door of the understanding, and importantly keeps it, truth is sure to find both an entrance and a welcome too.

2. The act of entering.

The reason, that I gather, he is mad,
Is a mad tale he told to-day at dinner,
Of his own door being shut against his entrance.

Shakespeare.

No XLVIII.

Better far, I guess,

That we do make our entrance several ways.

Shakespeare.

All the world's a stage,

And all the men and women merely players;

They have their exits and their entrances.

Shakespeare.

3. The passage by which a place is entered; avenue.

He charged them to keep the passages of the hilly country;

for by them there was an entrance into Judea.

Palladio did conclude, that the principal entrance was never to be regulated by any certain dimensions, but by the dignity of the matter.

Wotton.

Many are the ways that lead

To his grim cave, all dismal! yet to sense

More terrible at th' entrance than within.

Milton.

Let this, and every other anxious thought,

At th' entrance of my threshold be forgot.

Dryden.

4. Initiation; commencement.

This is that which, at first entrance, balks and cools them;

they want their liberty.

far from myself, as that I am right sorry that you enl'd so soon.

Spenser.

Adam, now enforc'd to close his eyes,

Sunk down and all his spirits became *entran*d.

Milton.

And I so ravish'd with her heav'nly note,

I stood *entran*d, and had no room for thought;

But all o'erpower'd with ecstacy of bliss,

Was in a pleasing dream of paradise.

Dryden.

TO ENTRAP. v. a. [from trap.]

1. To enlure; to catch in a trap or snare.

Take heed, mine eyes, now ye do stare

Henceforth too rashly on that gaudy net;

In which, if ever eyes *entrap*d are,

Out of her bands ye by no means shall get.

Spenser.

2. To involve unexpectedly in difficulties or distresses; to entangle.

Misfortune waits advantage to entrap

The man most wary, in herwhelming pain.

Isaac entrusted the Lord for his wife.

Genesis.

2. To prevail upon by solicitation.

I have a wife, whom I protect, I love;

I would she were in heaven, so she could

Entreat some power to change this curiish Jew.

Shakespeare.

The Lord was entreated of him and Rebekah his wife conceived.

Genesis.

It were a fruitless attempt to appease a power, whom no prayers could entreat, no repentance reconcile.

Rogers.

3. To treat or use well or ill.

Whereas thy servant worketh truly, entreat him not evil.

Ecclus.

Must you, sir John, protect my lady here?

Entreat her not the worse in that I pray

You use her well.

Shakespeare.

Well I entreated her, who well deserv'd:

I call'd her often, for she always serv'd:

Use made her person easy to my sight,

And ease insensibly produc'd delight.

Prior.

4. To entertain; to amuse.

My lord, I must entreat the time alone.

Shakespeare.

—God shield I should disturb devotion.

5. To entertain; to receive.

The garden of Proserpina this night,

Nor were their just petition long deny'd. Fairfax.

ENTRE'ATY. n. f. [from entreat.] Petition; prayer; solicitation; supplication; request.

If my weak orator

Can from his mother win the duke of York,

Anon expect him here; but if she be

Obdurate to entreaties, God forbid

We should infringe the holy privilege

Of sanctuary. Shakespeare.

ENTREMENTS. n. f. [French.] Small plates set between the main dishes. Mortimer.

Chards of beet are plants of white beet transplanted, producing great tops, which, in the midly, have a large white main shoot, which is the true chard used in potages and entremets.

ENTRY. n. f. [from enter; entree, French.]

1. The passage by which any enters a house.

Some there are that know the resorts and falls of business, that cannot sink into the main of it; like a house that hath convenient flairs and entries, but never a fair room. Bacon's Essays.

A strait long entry to the temple led,

Blind with high walls, and horror over head. Dryden.

Is all this hurry made

On this account, because thou art afraid

A dirty hall or entry should offend

The curious eyes of thy invited friend? Dryden.

We proceeded through the entry, and were necessary kept in order by the situation. Tatler.

2. The act of entrance; ingress.

Bathing and anointing give a relaxation or emolliation; and the mixture of oil and water is better than either of them alone, because water entereth better into the pores, and oil after entry softeneth better. Bacon.

I took horse to the lake of Constance, which lies at two leagues distance from it, and is formed by the entry of the Rhine. Addison.

By the entry of the chyle and air into the blood, by the lacteals, the animal may again revive. Arbutnot.

That thus envenom'd the might kindle rage,

And sacrifice to frife her house and husband's age. Dryden.

ENVIABLE. adj. [from envy.] Deserving envy; such as may excite envy.

They, in an enviable mediocrity of fortune, do happily possess themselves. Care.

ENVIER. n. f. [from envy.] One that envies another; a maligner; one that desires the downfall of another.

Men had need beware how they be too perfect in compliments; for that enviers will give them that attribute, to the disadvantage of their virtues. Bacon.

They need'd

That self-same day, by fight or by surprize,

To win the mount of God, and on his throne

To set the envier of his state, the proud

Aspirer; but their thoughts prov'd fond and vain. Milton.

All preferments in church and state were given by him, all his kindred and friends promoted, and all his enemies and enviers discountenanced. Clarendon.

ENVIOUS. adj. [from envy.] Infected with envy; pained by the excellence or happiness of another.

A man of the most envious disposition that ever infected the air with his breath, whose eyes could not look right upon any happy man, nor ears bear the burden of any man's praise. Sid.

Still in thy right hand carry gentle peace,

To silence envious tongues.

Be not thou envious against evil men.

Neither be thou envious at the wicked.

Sure you mistake the precept, or the tree;

Heav'n cannot envious of his blessings be. Dryden.

ENVIOUSLY. adj. [from envious.] With envy; with malignity; with ill will.

Damned spirits, being fallen from heaven, endeavour enviously to obstruct the ways that may lead us thither. Duffy.

How enviously the ladies look,

When they surmise me at my book!

And sure as they're alive at night,

As soon as gone, will they their sight. Swift.

TO ENVI'RON. v. a. [from environner, French.]

1. To surround; to encompass; to encircle.

I stand as one upon a rock,

Environ'd with a wilderness of sea. Shakespeare.

The country near unto the city of Sultania is on every side environed with huge mountains. Asiatic.

The manifold streams of goodly navigable rivers, as in many chains, environed the same site and temple. Bacon.

On a plain, within the envioning rocks, flood the city. Scudry's Juny.

A wand'ring

Compact of uncious vapour, which the night

Condenses and the cold envious round. Milton.

Thought following thought, and step by step led on,

He enter'd now the bordering desert wild,

And with dark shades and rocks environ'd round,

His holy meditation thus pursu'd. Milton.

God hath scattered several degrees of pleasure and pain in all the things that environ and affect us, and blended them together in almost all our thoughts. Locke.

2. To involve; to envelop.

May never glorious fun reflect his beams Upon the country where you make abode!

But darkness and the gloomy shade of death

Environ you, till mischief and despair

Drive you to break your necks. Shakespeare.

Since the must go, and I must mourn, come, night,

Environ me with darkness whilst I write. Drom.

3. To surround in a hostile manner; to besiege; to hem in.

Methought a legion of foul fiends

Environ'd me, howled in mine ears

Such hideous cries, that with the very thought

I trembling wak'd. Shakespeare.

In thy danger,

If ever danger do environ thee.

Commend thy grievance to my holy prayer.

I did but prompt the age to quit their clogs,

By the known laws of ancient liberty,

When straight a barbarous noise environ me. Milton.

4. To inclose; to invest.

The soldier, that man of iron,
Whom ribs of horror all enclose. Cleveland.
ENVYRONS. n. f. [environs, French.] The neighbourhood or neighbouring places round about the country.

TO ENUMERATE. v. a. [enumerare, Latin.] To reckon up finely; to count over distinctly; to number.

You must not only acknowledge to God that you are a sinner, but must particularly enumerate the kinds of sin whereof you know yourself guilty. Wale.

Besides enumerating the gross defect of duty to the queen, I threw how all things were managed wrong. Swift.

ENUMERATION. n. f. [enumeratio, Latin.] The act of numbering or counting over; number told out.

Whoever reads St Paul's enumeration of duties incumbent upon it, must conclude, that well nigh the business of Christianity is laid on charity. Spratt.

The chemists make spirit, salt, sulphur, water, and earth their five elements, though they are not all agreed in this enumeration of elements. Watts.

TO ENUNCIATE. v. a. [enunciare, Latin.] To declare; to proclaim; to relate; to express.

ENUNCIATION. n. f. [enunciatio, Latin.]

1. Declaration; public attestation; open proclamation.

This preaching is to strangers and infants in Christ, to produce faith; but this sacramental enunciation is the declaration and confession of it by men in Christ, declaring it to be done, and owned and accepted, and prevailing. Taylor.

2. Intelligence; information.

It remembers and retains such things as were never at all in the sense; as the conceptions, enunciations, and actions of the intellect and will. Hale.

ENUNCIATIVE. adj. [from enunciate.] Declarative; expressive.

This presumption only proceeds in respect of the dispositive words, and not in regard of the enunciative terms thereof. Ayl.

ENUNCIATIVELY. adv. [from enunciate.] Declaratively.

ENVY. n. f. [envy, French.]

1. A public miller sent from one power to another.

Now the Lycian loins conspire
With Phœbus; now Jove's envy through the air Brings dismal tydings. Denham.

Perseus sent envy to Carthage, to kindle their hatred against the Romans. Arbutnot.

2. A public messenger, in dignity below an ambassador.

3. A messenger.

The watchful sentinels at every gate,
At every passage to the senses wait;
Still travel to and fro the nervous way,
And their impressions to the brain convey;
Where their report the vital envy make,
And with new orders are commanded back. Blackmore.

TO ENVY. v. a. [envier, French; invidere, Latin.]

1. To hate another for excellence, happiness, or success.

Envy thou not the oppressor, and chide none of his ways. Prov. iii. 31.

A woman does not envy a man for fighting courage, nor a man a woman for her beauty. Ciliter.

2. To grieve at any qualities of excellence in another.

I have felt the fight, Shakespeare.

When I have envied thy behaviour.
You cannot envy your neighbour's wisdom, if he gives you good counsel; nor his riches, if he supplies you in your wants; nor his greatness, if he employs it to your protection. Swift.

3. To grudge; to impart unwillingly; to withhold maliciously.

Johnson, who, by studying Horace, had been acquainted with the rules, seemed to envy others that knowledge. Dryden.

TO ENVY. v. n. To feel envy; to feel pain at the sight of excellence or felicity.

In seeking tales and informations
Against this man, whole honesty the devil
And his disciples only envy at.
Ye blew the fire that burns ye. Shakespeare.

He that loves God is not displeased at accidents which God chuses, nor envies at those gifts he bestows. Taylor.

Who would envy at the prosperity of the wicked, and the success of persecutors? Taylor.

ENVY. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Pain felt and malignity conceived at the sight of excellence or happiness.

Envy is a repining at the prosperity or good of another, or anger and displeasure at any good of another which we want, or any advantage another hath above us. Ray.

All the conspirators, save only he,
Did that they did in envy of great Cæsar. Shakespeare.

Many suffered death merely in envy to their virtues and superior genius. Swift.

Envy, to which th' ignoble mind's a slave,
Is emulation in the learn'd or brave. Pope.

2. Rivalry; competition.

You may see the parliament of women, the little envies of them to one another. Dryden.

Malice; malignity.

Madam, this is a meer distraction;

You turn the good we offer into envy. Shakespeare.

4. Public odium; ill repute.

Edward Plantagenet should be, in the most publick and notorious manner, shewed unto the people; to discharge the king of the envy of that opinion and bruit, how he had been put to death privily. Bacon.

TO ENWHEEL. v. a. [from wheel.] To encompass; to encircle. A word probably peculiar to Shakespeare.

Hail to thee, lady! and the grace of heav'n,

Before, behind thee, and on every hand

Enwheel thee round. Shakespeare.

TO ENWOMB. v. a. [from womb.]

1. To make pregnant.

Me then he left enwomb'd of this child,

This luckless child, whom thus ye see with blood. Shakespeare.

I'm your mother;

And put you in the catalogue of those

That were enwomb'd mine. Shakespeare.

2. To bury; to hide as in a womb.

Or as the Africk Niger stream enwombs

Itself into the earth, and after comes,

Having first made a natural bride to pass,

For many leagues, far greater than it was;

May't not be said, that her grave shall restore

Her greater, purer, finer than before. Denne.

EOCLIPSE. n. f. [from Eclis and pila.] A hollow ball of metal with a long pipe; which ball, filled with water, and exposed to the fire, lends out, as the water heats, at intervals, blasts of cold wind through the pipe.

Considering the structure of that globe, the exterior crust, and the water lying round under it, both exposed to the sun, we may fully compare it to an eclipse, or an hollow sphere with water in it, which the heat of the fire rarefies, and turns into vapours and wind. Burnet.

EPOCH. n. f. [from EPOCH.] A number, whereby we note the excess of the common solar year above the lunar, and thereby may find out the age of the moon every year.

For the solar year consisting of 365 days, the lunar but of 354, the lunations every year get eleven days before the solar year; and thereby, in 19 years, the moon completes 20 times 12 lunations, or gets up one whole solar year; and having finished that circuit, begins again with the sun, and so from 19 to 19 years.

For the first year afterwards the moon will go before the sun but 11 days; the second year 22 days; the third 33 days; but 3 being an entire lunation, cast that away, and the remainder 3 shall be that year's epoch; and so on, adding yearly 11 days. To find the epoch, having the prime or golden number given, you have this rule:

Divide by three; for each one left add ten;

Thirty reject; the prime makes epoch then. Horris.

As the cycle of the moon seems to sweep the epoch, and that of the sun the dominical letter, though to all their variations; so this Dionysian period serves to show these two cycles both together, and how they proceed or vary all along, 'till at last they accomplish their period, and both together take their beginning again, after every 532 year. Holder.

EPAULME. n. f. [French, from epau, a shoulder.] In fortification, a sidewalk made either of earth thrown up, or bags of earth, gabions, or of fascines and earth; of which latter are made the epaulments of the places of arms for the cavalry behind the trenches. It sometimes denotes a semibastion and a square orillon, or mafs of earth faced and lined with a wall, designed to cover the cannon of a casemate. Harris.

EPIENTHESIS. n. f. [from EPI and THESIS.] In grammar, The addition of a vowel or consonant in the middle of a word. Harris.

E'PHLA. n. f. [Hebrew.] A measure among the Jews, containing fifteen solid inches.

The epha and the bath shall be of one measure; that the bath may contain the tenth part of an homer, and the epha the tenth part of an homer. Exod. xlv. 11.

EPHE'MERA. n. f. [from EPH.]

1. A fever that terminates in one day.

2. An insect that lives only one day.

EPHE'MERAL. n. f. [from EPH.] Diurnal; beginning and ending in a day.

EPHE'MERICK. n. f. [from EPH.] ing in a day.

This was no more than a meer bubble or blast, and like an ephemeral fit of applause. Watson.

EPHE'MERIS. n. f. [from EPH.]

1. A journal; an account of daily transactions.

2. An account of the daily motions and situations of the planets.

When casting up his eyes against the light,

Both month, and day, and hour he measur'd right;

And told more truly than the ephemeris;

For art may err, but nature cannot mis. Dryden.

EPHE'MERIST. n. f. [from ephemeris.] One who consults the planets; one who studies or practises astrology.

The night immediately before, he was discoursing of and sighting the art of those foolish astrologers and genethical ephemerists, that use to pry into the horoscopes of nations. Hewitt's Vocal Swift.

EPHEMERON.

EPHEMERON-WORM. n. f. [from ἐπιμερον and worm.] A sort of worm that lives but a day.

Swammerdam observes of the epheron-worms, that their food is clay, and that they make their cells of the same. Deib.
EPHOD. n. f. [ἔφωδ.] A sort of ornament worn by the Hebrew priests. That worn by the high priest was richly composed of gold, blue, purple, crimson, and twisted cotton; and upon the part which came over his two shoulders, were two large precious stones, upon which were engraven the names of the twelve tribes of Israel, upon each stone six names. Where the ephod crossed the high priest's breast, was a square ornament, called the breast-plate; in which twelve precious stones were set with the names of the twelve tribes of Israel engraved on them, one on each stone. The ephods worn by the other priests were only of plain linen.

Calmet.
 He made the ephod of gold, blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen.

Atty'd in ephods; nor so few

As are those pearls of morning dew,

Which hang on herbs and flowers.

Sandy.
EPIC. adj. [epicus, Latin; ἔπος.] Narrative; comprising narrations, not acted, but rehearsed. It is usually supposed to be heroic, or to contain one great action achieved by a hero.

Holmes, whose name shall live in epic songs,

While much numbers, or while verse has fact.

Dryden.
 The epic poem is more for the manners, and the tragedy for the passions.

Dryden.
 From morality they formed that kind of poem and fable which we call epic.

Pope.
EPICURIUM. n. f. [ἐπικουριος.] An elegy; a poem upon a funeral.

You from above shall hear each day

One dirge dispatch'd unto your clay;

These, your own anthems, shall become

Your lasting epicidium.

Sandy.
EPICURE. n. f. [ἐπικουρος, Latin.] A follower of Epicurus; a man given wholly to luxury.

Then fly false thames,

And mingle with the English epicures.

Shakespeare.
 The epicure buckles to study, when thames, or the desire to recommend himself to his mistress, shall make him uneasy in the want of any sort of knowledge.

Locke.
EPICUREAN. n. f. [ἐπικουρος, Latin.] One who holds the philosophical principles of Epicurus.

The Platonists have their soul of the world, and the Epicureans their endeavour towards motion in their atoms when at rest.

Locke.
EPICUREAN. adj. Luxurious; contributing to luxury.

Tie up the libertine in a field of feasts,

Keep his brain fuming with epicurean cooks,

Sharpen with cloyless sauce his appetite.

Shakespeare.
 What a damn'd epicurean rascal is this!

Shakespeare.
EPICURISM. n. f. [from epicure.] Luxury; sensual enjoyment; gross pleasure.

Here you do keep a hundred knights and squires;

Men to disorder'd, do to debauch'd and bold,

'Tis this our court, infected with their manners,

Shews like a riotous inn; epicurism and lust

Make it a tavern or a brothel.

Shakespeare.
 'Tis not half so much epicurism in any of their most studied luxuries, as a bleeding fame at their mercy.

Government of the Tongue.
 Some good men have ventured to call munificence, the greatest sensuality, a piece of epicurism.

Calamy.
EPICYCLE. n. f. [ἔπι κύκλῳ.] A little circle whose center is in the circumference of a greater; or a small orb, which, being fixed in the deferent of a planet, carries the body of the planet fastened to it round about its proper center.

Harris.
 In regard of the epicycle, or lesser orb, wherein it moveth, the motion of the moon is various and unequal.

Brown.
 Gird the sphere

With centric and eccentric, scribbled o'er;

Cycle and epicycle, orb in orb.

Milton.
EPICYCLOID. n. f. [ἐπικύκλιος.] A curve generated by the revolution of the periphery of a circle along the convex or concave part of another circle.

Harris.
EPIDEMICAL. adj. [ἐπιδεμικός.]

EPIDEMICK. adj. [ἐπιδεμικός.]

1. That which falls at once upon great numbers of people, as a plague.

It was conceived not to be an epidemic disease, but to proceed from a malignity in the constitution of the air, gathered by the predispositions of seasons.

Bacon.
 As the proportion of acute and epidemic diseases shews the aptness of the air to sudden and vehement impressions, so the chronic diseases shew the ordinary temper of the place.

Graunt.

2. Generally prevailing; affecting great numbers.

The more epidemic and prevailing this evil is, the more honourable are those who shine as exceptions.

Swish.
 He ought to have been busied in losing his money, or in other amusements equally laudable and epidemic among persons of honour.

Swift.
 3. General; universal.

'They're citizens o' th' world, they're all in all;

Scotland's a nation epidemic.

Cleveland.
EPIDERMIS. n. f. [ἐπιδερμικός.] The scarf-skin of a man's body.

EPIGRAM. n. f. [ἐπίγραμμα, Latin.] A short poem terminating in a point.

A college of witcrackers cannot flout me out of my humour: do thou think I care for a satire or an epigram?

Shak.
 What can be more witty than the epigram of Moore upon the name of Nicolas, an ignorant physician, that had been the death of thousands?

Præbom.

I write

An epigram that boasts more truth than wit.

Gog.
EPIGRAMMATICAL. adj. [ἐπίγραμματικός, atin.]

EPIGRAMMATICK. adj. [ἐπίγραμματικός, atin.]

1. Dealing in epigrams; writing epigrams.

Our good epigrammatical poet, old Godfrey of Winchester, thinketh no ominous foreboding to lie in names.

Camilia.
 2. Suitable to epigrams; belonging to epigrams.

He is every where above conceits of epigrammatick wit and gross hyperboles: he maintains majesty in the midst of plainness; he shines, but glares not; and is flately, without ambition.

Adrian.
 He has none of those little points and puerilities that are so often to be met with in Ovid; none of the epigrammatick turns of Lucan; none of those swelling sentiments which are so frequent in Statius and Claudian; none of those mixt embellishments of Tallo.

Adrian.
EPIGRAMMATIST. n. f. [from epigram.] One who writes or deals in epigrams.

A jest upon a poor wit, at first might have had an epigrammatick for its laiter, and been afterwards gravely understood by some painful collector.

Pope.
 Such a customer the epigrammatist Martial met withal, one who, after he had walked through the fairest direct trade or thrice, cheapening jewels, plate, rich hangings, came away with a wooden dish.

Præbom.
EPIGRAPHE. n. f. [ἐπιγραφή.] An inscription on a statue. Dist.

ETIPLEPSY. n. f. [ἐπιπληξίς.] A convulsion, or convulsive motion of the whole body, or of some of its parts, with a loss of sense. A convulsive motion happens when the blood, or nervous fluid, runs into any parts with too great violence, that the mind cannot restrain them from attraction.

Quincy.
 My lord is fell into an etiplexy:

This is the second fit.

Shakespeare.
 Melancholy distempers are deduced from spirits drawn from that cacochymia; the phrenitis from choleick spirits, and the etiplexy from fumes.

Fayr.
ETIPLETICK. adj. [from etiplexy.] Convulsed; diseased with an etiplexy.

A plague upon your etipletick visage!

Smile you my speeches, as I were a fool?

Shakespeare.
Etipleticks ought to breathe a pure air, unaffected with any steams, even such as are very fragrant.

Arctian.
ETILOQUE. n. f. [ἐπιλογος, Latin.] The poem or speech at the end of a play.

If it be true that good wine needs no bush, 'tis true that a good play needs no etilogue; yet to good wine they do use good bushes, and good plays prove the better by the help of good etilogues.

Shakespeare.
 Are you mad, you dog;

I am to rise and speak the etilogue.

Dryden.
EPINYCTIS. n. f. [ἐπινύκτις.] A lore at the corner of the eye.

The epinyctis is of the bigness of a lupin, of a dusky red, and sometimes of a livid and pale colour, with great inflammation and pain: it discharges first a series of bloody matter.

Wijman.
EPYPHANY. n. f. [ἐπιφάνεια.] A church festival, celebrated on the twelfth day after Christmas, in commemoration of our Saviour's being manifested to the world, by the appearance of a miraculous blazing star, which conducted the Magi to the place where he was.

Dist.
EPYPHONEMA. n. f. [ἐπιφώνημα.] An exclamation; a conclusive sentence not closely connected with the words foregoing.

I know a gentleman, who made it a rule in reading to skip over all sentences where he spied a note of admiration at the end. I believe, if those preachers who abound in epypnomata would but look about them, they would find one part of their congregation out of countenance, and the other asleep, except perhaps an old female beggar or two in the files; who, if they be sincere, may probably groan at the found.

Swift.
EPYPHORA. n. f. [ἐπιφύρα.] An inflammation of any part, but more especially a delusion of humours on the eyes.

Harris.
EPYPIHIA.

EPITHYLOSTERMOSUS. ad. [from $\epsilon\pi\iota$, $\Phi\acute{\upsilon}\lambda\lambda\omicron\varsigma$ and $\sigma\tau\epsilon\rho\mu\alpha$.]

Is applied to plants that bear their seed on the back part of their leaves, being the same with capillaries. Harrii.

EPIPHYSIS. n. f. [$\epsilon\pi\iota\phi\upsilon\sigma\iota\varsigma$.] Accretion; the part added by accretion; one bone growing to another by simple contiguity, without any proper articulation. Quincy.

The epiphysis of the os femoris is a distinct bone from it in a child, whereas in a man they do entirely unite. Wifeman.

EPITROCH. n. f. [$\epsilon\pi\iota\tau\omicron\chi\alpha$.] A figure of rhetoric, by which one aggravation, or striking circumstance, is added in due gradation to another; as, he not only spared his enemies, but continued them in employment; not only continued, but advanced them.

EPISCOPACY. n. f. [episcopatus, Latin.] The government of bishops; the government of the church established by the popes.

They durst not contend with the assembly in jurisdiction; so that there was little more than the name of episcopacy preserved. Clarendon.

Prelacy itself cannot be proved by prescription, since episcopacy is not prescribed by any time whatsoever. Dryden.

EPISCOPAL. adj. [from episcopatus, Latin.]

1. Belonging to a bishop.

The apostle commands Titus not only to be a pattern of good works himself, but to use his episcopal authority in exhorting every rank and order of men. Rogers.

2. Vested in a bishop.

The plot of discipline sought to erect a popular authority of elders, and to take away episcopal jurisdiction. Hunter.

EPISCOPATE. n. f. [episcopatus, Latin.] A bishoprick; the office and dignity of a bishop.

EPISODE. n. f. [$\epsilon\pi\iota\sigma\omicron\delta\epsilon\iota\mu\alpha$.] An incidental narrative, or digression in a poem, separable from the main subject, yet rising naturally from it.

The poem, which we have now under our consideration, hath no other episodes than such as naturally arise from the subject. Addison.

EPISODICAL. adj. [from episode.] Contained in an episode; EPISODICK. adj. pertaining to an episode.

Episodical ornaments, such as descriptions and narrations, were delivered to us from the observations of Aristotle. Dryden.

I discover the difference between the episodick and principal action, as well as the nature of episodes. Notes on the Odyssey.

EPISPASTICK. n. f. [$\epsilon\pi\iota$ and $\sigma\tau\alpha\sigma\iota\varsigma$.]

1. Drawing.

2. Blistering. This is now the more frequent, though less proper sense.

The matter ought to be solicited, by all possible methods, to the lower parts, by fomentations, bathing, epispasticks, and blistering. Ariusmont.

EPISTLE. n. f. [$\epsilon\pi\iota\sigma\tau\lambda\eta$.] A letter. This word is seldom used but in poetry, or on occasions of dignity and solemnity.

When loose epistles violate chaste eyes,

She half consents, who silently denies. Dryden.

EPISTOLARY. adj. [from epistle.]

1. Relating to letters; suitable to letters.

2. Transacted by letters.

I shall carry on an epistolary correspondence between the two heads. Addison.

EPISTLER. n. f. [from epistle.] A scribbler of letters.

EPITAPH. n. f. [$\epsilon\pi\iota\tau\alpha\phi\iota\upsilon\sigma$.] An inscription upon a tomb.

Live still, and write mine epitaph. Shakespeare.

Some thy lov'd dust in Parian stones enshrine,

Others immortal epitaphs design;

With wit, and strength, that only yields to thine. Sm'th.

EPITHALAMUM. n. f. [$\epsilon\pi\iota$ $\Sigma\alpha\lambda\alpha\mu\omicron\varsigma$.] A nuptial song; a compliment upon marriage.

I presume to invite you to these sacred nuptials: the epithalamium sung by a crowned muse. Samoy.

The forty-fifth psalm is an epithalamium to Christ and the church, or to the lamb and his spouse. Burnet.

EPITHIM. n. f. [$\epsilon\pi\iota\theta\iota\mu\alpha$.] A liquid medicament externally applied.

Cordials and epithims are also necessary, to resist the putrefaction and strengthen the vitals. Wifeman.

EPITHET. n. f. [$\epsilon\pi\iota\theta\epsilon\tau\omicron\varsigma$.]

1. An adjective denoting any quality good or bad: as, the verdant grove, the craggy mountain's lofty head.

I affirm with phlegm, leaving the epithets of false, scandalous and villainous to the author. Swift.

2. It is used by some writers improperly for title, name.

The epithet of shades belonged more properly to the darkness than the refreshment. Deay of Picty.

3. It is used improperly for phrase, expression.

For which of my good parts did you first suffer love for me?—Suffer love! a good epithet: I do suffer love indeed; for I love thee against my will. Shakespeare.

EPITOME. n. f. [$\epsilon\pi\iota\tau\omicron\mu\epsilon$.] Abridgment; abbreviation; compendious abstract; compendium.

This is a poor epitome of yours,

N^o XLIX.

Which, by th' interpretation of full time,
May shew like all yourself.

Epitomes are helpful to the memory, and of good private use; but set forth for publick monuments, accuse the industrious writers of delivering much impertinency. Watson.

I think it would be well, if there were a short and plain epitome made, containing the chief and most material heads.

Locke on Education.

Such abstracts and epitomes may be reviewed in their proper places. Watts.

To EPITOMISE. v. a. [from epitome.]

1. To abstract; to extract into a narrow space.

Who did the whole world's foul contract, and drove

Into the glasses of your eyes;

So made such mirrors and such spies,

That they did all to you epitomis. Donne.

2. Less properly, to diminish; to curtail.

We have epitomised many particular words, to the detriment of our tongue. Addison.

EPITOMISER. n. f. [from epitomis.] An abridger; an ab-
EPITOMIST. n. f. [from epitomis.] A writer of epitomes.

ETROCH. n. f. [$\epsilon\tau\omicron\chi\epsilon$.] The time at which a new compu-

ETROCHA. n. f. [tation is begun; the time from which dates are numbered.

Moses distinctly sets down this account, computing by certain intervals, memorable eras and epochs, or terms of time. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

These are the practices of the world, since the year fifty is the grand epoch of falshood, as well as debauchery. South.

Some lazy ages, loll in sleep and ease,

No action leav' to busy chronicles;

Such whole fupine felicity but makes

In story chafins, in a epoch mistakes. Dryden.

Their several epochs or beginnings, as from the creation of the world, from the flood, from the first Olympiad, from the building of Rome, or from any remarkable passage or accident, give us a pleasant prospect into the histories of antiquity and of former ages. Holder.

Time is always reckoned from some known parts of this sensible world, and from some certain epochs marked out to us by the motions observable in it. Laite.

Time, by necessity compell'd, shall go

Through scenes of war, and epochs of woe. Prior.

ETRODE. n. f. [$\epsilon\tau\omicron\delta\epsilon$.] The stanza following the strophe and antistrophe.

ETROPE. n. f. [$\epsilon\tau\omicron\pi\omicron\iota\alpha$.] An epick or heroick poem.

Tragedy borrows from the epope, and that which borrows is of less dignity, because it has not of its own. Dryden.

EPULATION. n. f. [epulatio, Latin.] Banquet; feast.

Contented with bread and water, when he would dine with Jove, and pretended to epulation, he desired no other addition than a piece of cheese. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EPULOTICK. n. f. [$\epsilon\pi\upsilon\lambda\omicron\tau\iota\kappa\omicron\varsigma$.] A cicatrifying medicament.

The ulcer, incased with common farcotics, and the ulcerations about it, were cured by ointment of tuty, and such like epulotics. Wifeman.

EQUABILITY. n. f. [from equable.] Equality to itself; evenness; uniformity.

For the celestial bodies, the equability and constancy of their motions argue them ordained by wisdom. Ray.

The equability of the temperature of the air rendered the Asiatics lazy. Ariusmont.

EQUABLE. adj. [equabilis, Latin.] Equal to itself; even; uniform in respect to form, motion, or temperature.

He would have the vast body of a planet to be as elegant and round as a factitious globe represents it; to be every where smooth and equable, and as plain as Elysian fields. Bentley.

Nothing abates acrimony of the blood more than an equable motion of it, neither too swift nor too slow; for too quick a motion produceth an alkaline, and too slow an acid acrimony. Arbutnot.

EQUABLY. adv. [from equable.] Uniformly; in the same tenour; evenly; equally to itself.

If bodies move equably in concentrick circles, and the squares of their periodical times be as the cubes of their distances from the common center, their centripetal forces will be reciprocally as the squares of the distances. Clergyne.

EQUAL. adj. [equalis, Latin.]

1. Like another in bulk, excellence, or any other quality that admits comparison; neither greater nor less; neither worse nor better.

If thou be among great men, make not thyself equal with them. Ecclesi. xxxiii. 9.

Equal lot

May join us; equal joy, as equal love. Milten.

Although there were no man in the world to take notice of it, every triangle would contain three angles equal to two right angles. Hale.

2. Adequate to any purpose.

The Scots trusted not their own numbers, as equal to fight with the English. Clarendon.

3. Even;

3. Even; uniform.

He laughs at all the vulgar cares and fears,
At their vain triumphs, and their vainer tears;
An equal temper in his mind he found,
When fortune flatter'd him, and when she frown'd. Dryden.
Think not of me: perhaps my equal mind
May learn to bear the fate the gods allot me. Smith.

4. In just proportion.

It is not permitted me to make my commendations equal to your merit. Dryden.

5. Impartial; neutral.

Each to his proper fortune stand or fall;
Equal and unconcern'd I look on all:
Rutilians, Trojans, are the same to me,
And both shall draw the lots their fates decree. Dryden.

6. Indifferent.

They who are not disposed to receive them, may let them alone, or reject them; it is equal to me. Cheyne.

7. Equitable; advantageous alike to both parties.

He submitted himself, and swore to all equal conditions. 2 Mac. xiii. 23.

8. Upon the same terms.

They made the married, orphans, widows, yea and the aged also, equal in spoils with themselves. 2 Mac. viii. 30.

E'QUAL. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. One not inferior or superior to another.

He is enamour'd on Hero: I pray you, dissuade him from her; she is no equal for his birth. Shakspeare.
He would make them all equals to the citizens of Rome. 2 Mac. ix. 15.

Those who were once his equals, envy and defame him, because they now see him their superior; and those who were once his superiors, because they look upon him as their equal. Addison.

To my dear equal, in my native land,
My plighted vow I gave; I his receiv'd:
Each swore with truth; with pleasure each believ'd:
The mutual contract was to heav'n convey'd. Prior.

2. One of the same age.

I profited in the Jews religion above many my equals in mine own nation. Galatians.

To E'QUAL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make one thing or person equal to another.

To rise to the same state with another person.
I know no body so like to equal him, even at the age he wrote most of them, as yourself. Trumbull.

3. To be equal to.

One whose all not equals Edward's moiety. Shakspeare.

4. To recompense fully.

Then fought Sicilius through the shady grove,
Who answer'd all her cares, and equal'd all her love. Dryd.
Nor you, great queen, these offices repeat,
Which he will equal, and perhaps augment. Dryden.

To E'QUALISE. v. a. [from equal.]

1. To make even.

To equalise accounts we will allow three hundred years, and so long a time as we can manifest from the Scripture. B. oven.

2. To be equal to; a fence not used.

That would make the moved body, remaining what it is, in regard of its bigness, to equalise and fit a thing bigger than it is. Digby.

Ye lofty beeches, tell this matchless dame,
That if together ye fed all one flame,
It could not equalise the hundredth part
Of what her eyes have kindled in my heart. Waller.

E'QUALITY. n. f. [from equal.]

1. Likeness with regard to any quantities compared.

Equality of two domestic powers,
Breeds scrupulous faction: the hated, grown to strength,
Are newly grown to love. Shakspeare.

2. The same degree of dignity.

One shall rise,
Of proud ambition; who, not content
With fair equality, fraternal state,
Will arrogate dominion undeserv'd,
Over his brethren. Milton.

According to this equality wherein God hath placed all mankind, with relation to himself, in all the relations between man and man there is a mutual dependence. Saiff.

3. Evenness; uniformity; constant tenour; equality.

Measure out the lives of men, and periodically define the alterations of their tempers, conceive a regularity in mutations, with an equality in constitutions, and forget that variety which physicians therein discover. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

E'QUALLY. adv. [from equal.]

1. In the same degree with another person or thing; alike.

To reconcile mens vices to their fears is the aim of all the various schemes and projects of sin, and is equally intended by atheism and immorality. Rogers.

They are equally impatient of their condition, equally tempted with the wages of unrighteousness, as if they were indeed poor. Rogers.

2. Evenly; equably; uniformly.

If the motion of the sun were as unequal as of a ship, sometimes flow, and at others swift; or, if being constantly equally swift, it yet was not circular, and produced not the same appearances, it would not help us to measure time more than the motion of a comet does. Lake.

3. Impartially.

We shall use them,

As we shall find their merits and our safety

May equally determine. Shakspeare.

EQUANGULAR. adj. [from aequus and angular, Latin.] Consisting of equal angles.

EQUANIMITY. n. f. [aequanimitas, Latin.] Evenness of mind neither elated nor depressed.

EQUANIMOUS. adj. [aequanimis, Latin.] Even; not dejected; not elated.

EQUATION. n. f. [aequare, Latin.] The investigation of a mean proportion collected from the extremities of exact and defect, to be applied to the whole.

We are to find out the extremities on both sides, and from and between them the middle daily motions of the sun along the Ecliptic; and to frame tables of equation of natural days, to be applied to the mean motion by addition or subtraction, as the case shall require. Haller.

By an argument taken from the equations of the times of the eclipses of Jupiter's satellites, it seems that light is propagated in time, spending in its passage from the sun to us about ten minutes of time. Newton.

EQUATION. [In algebra.] Is an expression of the same quantity in two dissimilar terms, but of equal value; as $3x = 3y - d$. Dut.

EQUATION. [In astronomy.] The difference between the time marked out by the sun's apparent motion, and the time that is measured by its real or middle motion; according to which clocks and watches ought to be adjusted. Dut.

EQUATOR. n. f. [aequator, Latin.] On the earth, or equi-noctial in the heavens, is a great circle, whose poles are the poles of the world. It divides the globe into two equal parts, the northern and southern hemispheres. It passes through the east and west points of the horizon; and at the meridian is raised as much above the horizon as is the complement of the latitude of the place. Whenever the sun comes to this circle, it makes equal days and nights all round the globe, because he then rises due east and sets due west, which he does at no other time of the year. Harris.

By reason of the convexity of the earth, the eye of man, under the equator, cannot discover both the poles; neither would the eye, under the poles, discover the sun in the equator. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

On the other side the equator there is much land still re-

Rocks rich in gems, and mountains big with mines,
That on the high equator ridge rise,

Whence many a burbling stream auriferous plays. Thomson.

EQUATORIAL. adj. [from equator.] Pertaining to the equator;
taken at the equator.

The planets have spheroidal figures, and obliquities of their equatorial to their ecliptical planes. Clype.

EQUESTRIAN. adj. [equitarius, Latin.]

1. Appearing on horseback.

An equestrian lady appeared upon the plains. Spenser.

2. Skilled in horsemanship.

Belonging to the second rank in Rome.

EQUERRY. n. f. [equerie, French.] Master of the horse.

EQUICURIAL. adj. [aequus and curus, Latin.]

1. Having the legs of an equal length.

2. Having the legs of an equal length, and longer than the tail;
isofeleis.

An equicurve triangle goes upon a certain proportion of length and breadth. Dut.

We begin with Saturn, and successively draw lines from angle to angle, until seven equicurve triangles be described. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EQUIDISTANT. adj. [aequus and distans, Lat.] At the same distance.

The six stars are not all placed in the same concave spherical superficies, and equidistant from us, as they seem to be. Roy on the Creation.

EQUIDISTANTLY. adv. [from equidistant.] At the same distance.

The liver, though seated on the right side, yet by the fib-erian division equidistantly communicates unto either arm. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EQUIFORMITY. n. f. [aequus and forma, Latin.] Uniformity equality.

No diversity or difference, but a simplicity of parts and uniformity of motion. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EQUILATERAL. adj. [aequus and latus, Latin.] Having all sides equal.

Circles or squares, or triangles equilateral, which are all figures of equal lines, can differ but in greater or lesser. Bacon.
Trifling utility appears in their twelve signs of the zodiac.

diack and their aspects: why no more aspects than diametrically opposite, and such as make equilateral figures? Bentley.
TO EQUILIBRATE. v. a. [from equilibrium.] To balance equally; to keep even with equal weight on each side.

If the point of the knife, drawn over the loadstone, have in this affliction been drawn from the equator of the loadstone towards the pole, it will attract one of the extremes of an equilibrated magnetic needle. Boyle.

The bodies of fishes are equilibrated with the water in which they swim. Arbutnot.

EQUILIBRATION. n. f. [from equilibrate.] Equipoise; the act of keeping the balance even.

The accession of bodies upon, or secession thereof from the earth's surface, perturb not the equilibration of either hemisphere. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

In fo great a variety of motions, as running, leaping, and dancing, nature's laws of equilibration are always observed. Derham.

EQUILIBRIUM. n. f. [Latin.]

1. Equipoise; equality of weight.

2. Equality of evidence, motives, or powers of any kind.

'Things are not left to an equilibrium, to hover upon an indifference whether they shall come to pass, or not come to pass. South.

It is in equilibrium

If deities defend or no;

'Then let th' affirmative prevail,

As requisite to form my tale. Prior.

Health consists in the equilibrium between those two powers, when the fluids move so equally that they don't press upon the solids with a greater force than they can bear. Arbutnot.

EQUINECESSARY. adj. [from equus and necessarius, Latin.] Needless in the same degree.

For both to give blows and to carry,

In fights, are equinecessary. Hudibras.

EQUINOCTIAL. n. f. [from equus and nox, Latin.] The line that encompasses the world at an equal distance from either pole, to which circle when the sun comes, he makes equal days and nights all over the globe.

EQUINOCTIAL. adj. [from equinox.]

1. Pertaining to the equinox.

Thrice th' equinoctial line

He circled; four times cross'd the car of night

From pole to pole, traversing each colure. Milton.

Some say the sun

Was hid turn reins from th' equinoctial road,

Like distant breadth. Milton.

2. Happening about the time of the equinoxes.

3. Being near the equinoctial line; having the properties of things near the equator.

In vain they covet shades, and Thracia's gales,

Pining with equinoctial heat. Philips.

EQUINOCTIALLY. adv. [from equinoctial.] In the direction of the equinoctial.

They may be refrigerated inclinatorily, or somewhat equinoctially; that is, towards the eastern and western points. Brown.

EQUINOX. n. f. [from equus and nox, Latin.]

1. Equinoxes are the precise times in which the sun enters into her first point of Aries and Libra; for then, moving exactly under the equinoctial, he makes our days and nights equal. 'Tis he doth twice a year, about the 21st of March and 23d of September, which therefore are called the vernal and autumnal equinoxes. Horris.

It ariseth not unto Barmia, and heliacally about the autumnal equinox. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The time when this kid was taken out of the womb was about the vernal equinox. Roy.

'Twas now the month in which the world began,

If March beheld the first created man;

And since the vernal equinox, the sun

In Aries twelve degrees or more had run. Dryden.

2. Equality; even measure. Improper.

Do but see his vice;

'Tis to his virtues a just equinox,

The one as long as th' other. Shakespeare.

3. Equinoctial wind: a poetical use.

The passage yet was good; the wind, 'tis true,

Was foiner than high, but that was nothing new,

No more than usual equinoxes blew. Dryden.

EQUINOXIAL. adj. [from equus and nox, Latin.] Having the same number; consisting of the same number.

This talent of gold, though not equinoxial, not yet equivalent, as to any other; yet was equivalent to some correspondent talent in brals. Arbutnot.

TO EQUIP. v. a. [from equiper, French.]

1. To furnish for a horseman or cavalier.

2. To furnish; to accoutre; to dress out.

The country are led astray in following the town; and equipped in a ridiculous habit, when they fancy themselves in the height of the mode. Addison.

EQUIPAGE. n. f. [from equiper, French.]

1. Furniture for a horseman.

2. Carriage of state; vehicle.

Winged spirits, and chariots wing'd,
 From th' army of God: where stand of old
 Myriads, between two brazen mountains lodg'd
 Against a solemn day, harnes'd at hand, Celestial equipage! Milton.

3. Attendance; retinue.

Think what an equipage thou hast in air,

And view with scorn two pages and a chair. Pope.

4. Accoutrements; furniture.

Soon as thy dreadful trumpet begins to sound,

The god of war, with his fierce equipage,

Thou dost awake, sleep never he to found. Spenser.

I will not lend thee a penny.—

I will retort the sum in equipage. Shakespeare.

EQUIPAGE. adj. [from equiper.] Accoutred; attended; with fine habits; with splendid retinue.

She forth issued with a goodly train

Of squires and ladies, equipped well,

And entertained them right fairly, as befell. Spenser.

EQUIPONDENCY. n. f. [from equus and pondus, Latin.] The act of hanging in equipoise; not determined either way.

Doubtless the will of man, in the state of innocence, had an entire freedom, a perfect equipondency and indifference to either part of the contradiction, to stand or not to stand. South.

EQUIPMENT. n. f. [from equip.]

1. The act of equipping or accouttering.

2. Accoutrement; equipage.

EQUIPOISE. n. f. [from equus, Latin, and poise, French.] Equality of weight; equilibration; equality of force.

In the temperate zone of our life there are few bodies at such an equipoise of humours; but that the prevalence of some one indisposeth the spirits. Glanville.

EQUIPOLLENCE. n. f. [from equus and pollentia, Latin.] Equality of force or power.

EQUIPOLLENT. adj. [from equipollens, Lat.] Having equal power of force; equivalent.

Votary resolution is made equipollent to custom, even in matter of blood. Boon.

EQUIPONDERANCE. n. f. [from equus and pondus, Latin.] Equality of weight; equilibration; equality of force.

EQUIPONDERANT. adj. [from equus and ponderans, Latin.] Being of the same weight.

Their lungs may serve to render their bodies equiponderant to the water. Roy.

A column of air, of any given diameter, is equiponderant to a column of quicksilver of between twenty-nine and thirty inches height. Locke.

TO EQUIPONDERATE. v. n. [from equus and pondus, Latin.] To weigh equal to any thing.

The heaviness of any weight doth increase proportionally to its distance from the center: thus one pound A at D, will equiponderate unto two pounds at B, if the distance A D is double unto A B. Wilkins.

EQUIPONDIOUS. adj. [from equus and pondus, Lat.] Equilibrated; equal on either part.

The Scepticks affected an indifferent equipondious neutrality, as the only means to their ataxia. Glanville.

EQUITABLE. adj. [from equitabile, French.]

1. Just; due to justice.

It seems but equitable to give the artists leave to name them as they please. Boyle.

2. Loving justice; candid; impartial.

EQUITABLY. adv. [from equitable.] Justly; impartially.

EQUITY. n. f. [from equus, French; and equitas, Latin.]

1. Justice; right; honesty.

Foul subordination is predominant,

And equit exil'd your highness' land. Shakespeare.

Christianity secures both the private interests of men and the publick peace, enforcing all justice and equity. Tillotson.

2. Impartiality.

Liking their own somewhat better than other mens, even because they are their own, they must in equity allow us to be like unto them in this affection. Hobbes.

3. [In law.] The rules of decision observed by the court of Chancery.

EQUIVALENCE. n. f. [from equus and valere, Latin.] Equality of EQUIVALENCY. n. f. [from equus and valere, Latin.] Equality of power or worth.

Mull the servant of God be assured that which he nightly prays for shall be granted? Yes, either formally or by way of equivalence, either that or something better. Hominsind.

That there is any equivalence or parity of worth betwixt the good we do to our brother, and the good we hope for from God, all good Protestants do deny. Smalridge.

Civil causes are equivalent unto criminal causes, and of as great importance; but that this equivalence only respects the careful and diligent admission of proofs. Addison.

TO EQUIVALENCE. v. a. [from the noun.] To equivalence; to be equal to.

Whether the transgression of Eve seducing did not exceed Adam seduced, or whether the resistibility of his reason did not not equivalence the facility of her seduction, we shall refer to schoolmen.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EQUIVOCAL, adj. [aequus and valens, Latin.]

1. Equal in value.

Things

Well nigh equivalent, and neigh'ring value,
By lot are parted; but the value, high heav'n, thy share,
In equal balance laid with earth and hell,
Flings up the adverse scale, and thuns proportion. Prior.

2. Equal in value, or in any excellence.

No fair to thine

Equivalent, or second! which compell'd
Me thus, though importune perhaps, to come
And gaze, and worship thee. Milton.

3. Equal in force or power.

The dread of Israel's foes, who, with a strength
Equivalent to angels, walk'd their streets,
None offering fight. Milton.

4. Of the same cogency or weight.

The consideration of publick utility is, by very good advice, judged at the least equivalent with the easier kind of necessity. Hobbes.

5. Of the same import or meaning.

The use of the word minister is brought down to the literal signification of it, a servant; for now to serve and to minister, servile and ministerial, are terms equivalent. South.

EQUIVALENT, n. f. A thing of the same weight, dignity, or value.

The slave without a ransom shall be sent;
It rests for you to make th' equivalent. Dryden.
Fancy a regular obedience to one law will be a full equivalent for their breach of another. Rogers.

EQUIVOCAL, adj. [aequivocus, Latin.]

1. Of doubtful signification; meaning different things; standing for different notions.

These sentences to fugar, or to gall,
Being strong on both sides, are equivocal. Shakespeare.
Words of different significations, taken in general, are of an equivocal sense; but being considered with all their particular circumstances, they have their sense restrained. Stillingfleet.
The greater number of those who held this were misguided by equivocal terms. Swift.

2. Uncertain; doubtful; happening different ways.

Equivocal generation is the production of plants without seed, or of insects or animals without parents in the natural way of coition between male and female; which is now believed never to happen, but that all bodies are univocally produced. Harr.
My affirmation is, that there is no such thing as equivocal or spontaneous generation; but that all animals are generated by animal parents of the same species with themselves. Ray.

Those half-learn'd widdings, num'rous in our isle
As half-form'd insects on the banks of Nile;
Unfinish'd things, one knows not what to call,
Their generation's so equivocal. Pope.

EQUIVOCAL, n. f. Ambiguity; word of doubtful meaning.

Shall two or three wretched equivocals have the force to corrupt us. Dennis.

EQUIVOCALLY, adv. [from equivocal.]

1. Ambiguously; in a doubtful or double sense.

Words abstracted from their proper force and significat'on, lose the nature of words, and are only equivocally called. South.
2. By uncertain or irregular birth; by equivocal generation; by generation out of the stated order.

No insect or animal did ever proceed equivocally from putrefaction, unless in miraculous cases; as in Egypt by the Divine judgments. Bentley.

EQUIVOCALNESS, n. f. [from equivocal.] Ambiguity; double meaning.

Distinguish the equivocalness or latitude of the word, and then point out that terminate part which is the ground of my demonstration. Norris.

TO EQUIVOCATE, v. n. [aequivocatus, Latin.] To use words of double meaning; to use ambiguous expressions; to mean one thing and express another.

Not only Jesuits can equivocate. Dryden.
My soul did/dain'd a promise;
But yet your false equivocating tongue,
Your looks, your eyes, your very motion promis'd:
But you are ripe in frauds, and learn'd in falshoods. Smith.

EQUIVOCATION, n. f. [aequivocatio, Latin.] Ambiguity of speech; double meaning.

Reproof is easily misapplied, and, through equivocation, wrefted. Hobbes.

I pull in resolution, and begin
To doubt the equivocation of the fiend,
That lies like truth. Shakespeare.

EQUIVOCATOR, n. f. [from equivocate.] One who uses ambiguous language; one who uses meta'd reservation.

Here's an equivocator, that could swear in both the scales against either scale; who committed treason, yet could not equivocate to heaven. Shakespeare.

ER, a syllable in the middle of names or places, comes by contraction from the Saxon para, dwellers.

ERA, n. f. [era, Latin.] 1. The account of time from any particular date or epoch.

From the blessings they bestow
Our times are dated, and our eras move:
They govern, and enlighten all below,
As thou do'st all above.

ERADIA TION, n. f. [e and radius, Latin.] Emission of ra-diance.

God gives me a heart humbly to converse with him, from whom alone are all the eradiations of true majesty. K. Charles.

TO ERADICATE, v. a. [eradic, Latin.]

1. To pull up by the root.

He suffereh the poison of Nubia to be gathered, and Acquiesce to be eradicated, yet this not to be moved. Brown's Vulg. Err.

2. To completely destroy; to end; to cut off.
If a gouty person can bring himself entirely to a milk diet, he may to change the whole juicy of his body as to eradicate the distemper. Ar. admet.

If vice cannot wholly be eradicated, it ought at least to be confined to particular objects. Swift.

ERADICA TION, n. f. [from eradicate.]

1. The act of tearing up by the root; destruction; excision.
2. The state of being torn up by the roots.

They affirm the roots of mandrakes give a shriek upon *eradi-

ERADICATIVE, adj. [from eradicate.] That which cuts radically; that which drives quite away.

TO ERASE, v. a. [eraser, French.] To destroy; to efface;
to expunge; to rub out.

The heads of birds, for the most part, are given erased;
that is, plucked off. Faust.

ERASEMENT, n. f. [from erasc.]

1. Destruction; devastation.
2. Expunction; abolition.

ERE, adv. [er, Saxon; air, Gothick; er, Dutch. This word is sometimes vitiously written er, as if from er. It is also written er before ever, or and an in Saxon being incriminately written. Mr. Lye.

1. Before; sooner than.
Ere he would have hang'd a man for the getting a hundred bastards, he would have paid for the nursing a thousand. Shel.

The lions brake all their bones in pieces er ever they came to the bottom of the den. Daniel.

Just trial, ere I merit
My exaltation without change or end. Milton.

The mountain trees in distant prospect please,
Ere yet the pine defended to the seas;
Ere fairs were spread new oceans to explore. Dryden.

Our fruitful Nile
Flow'd ere the wonted season. Dryden.

The birds shall cease to tune their evening song,
The winds to breathe, the waving woods to move,
And streams to murmur, ere I cease to love. Pope.

ERELONG, adv. [from ere and long.] Before a long time had elapsed. Nec longum tempus.

The wild hero having enmity with the flag, came to a man to desire aid, who mounted upon his back, and, throwing the flag, erelong flew him. Spenser.

The anger already began to paint revenge in many eyes, erelong he had not only gotten pity but pardon. Shelton.
Nothing is lasting that is feigned: it will have another than it had erelong. Luc. 17. 34.

They swim in joy,
*Ere*long to swim at large, and laugh, for which
The world erelong a world of tears must weep. Milton.

I saw two stock-doves billing, and erelong
Will take the nest. Dennis.

It pleases me to think, that I who know so small a part of the works of the Creator, and with slow and painful steps creep up and down on the surface of this globe, shall erelong shoot away with the swiftness of imagination, and trace the spectators of nature's operations.

ERENO, v. adv. [from ere and now.] Before this time.

Ah, gentle soldiers, come forth time allow,
My father has repented him ereno. Dryden.
Had the world eternally been, science had been brought to perfection long ereno. Erasmus.

EREWHILE, adv. [from ere and while.] Some time ago.

EREWHILES, adv. [from ere and while.] Some time ago.

I am as fair now as I was erewhile:
Since night you lov'd me, yet 'twice night you lov'd me. Shel.

We fit down to our meals, (supper not the intrusion of armed uninvited guests, who erewhiles, we know, were wont to intrude us. D. of Pal.

TO ERECT, v. a. [erectus, Latin.]

1. To raise in a straight line; to place perpendicularly to the horizon.

2. To ERECT a Perpendicular. To cross one line by another at right angles. 3. To

3. To raise; to build.

Happier walls expect,

Esco'toir. n. f. [French.] A box with all the implements necessary for writing.

Esco'age. n. f. [from escu, French, a shield.]

Esuage, that is, service of the shield, is either uncertain or certain. Esuance uncertain is likewise twofold: first, where the tenant by his tenure is bound to follow his lord, going in person to the king's war against his enemies, either himself, or to send a sufficient man in his place, at his cost, so many days as were agreed upon between the lord and his first tenant at the granting of the fee; and the days of such service seem to have been rated by the quantity of the land so holden: as, if it extend to a whole knight's fee, then the tenant was bound to follow his lord forty days. A knight's fee was so much land as, in those days, was accounted a sufficient living for a knight; and that was six hundred and eighty acres as some think, or eight hundred as others, or 15 l. per Annum. Sir Thomas Smith saith that centus equitris is 40 l. revenue in free lands. If the law extend but to half a knight's fee, then the tenant is bound to follow his lord, as above is said, but twenty days. The other kind of this esuance uncertain is called castleward, where the tenant by his land is bound, either by himself or by some other, to defend a castle as often as it shall come to his course. Esuance certain is where the tenant is set at a certain fund of money, to be paid in lieu of such uncertain services: as that a man yearly pay for a knight's fee twenty shillings; for half his fee, ten shillings, or some like rate. Cowel.

E'sculet. adj. [esculentus, Latin.] Good for food; eatable.

I knew a man that would fain five days; but the fame man used to have continually a great wisp of herbs that he smelt on, and some esculent herbs of strong scent, as garlick. Bacon.

E'sculet. n. f. Something fit for food.
This cutting off the leaves in plants, where the root is the esculent, as radish and parsnips, it will make the root the greater, and so it will do to the heads of onions; and where the fruit is the esculent, by strengthening the root, it will make the fruit also the greater. Bacon.

EsPA'lier. n. f. Trees planted and cut so as to join.
Plant your faircell tulips in places of shelter, and under espaliers. Eleyer.

ESSENCE. n. f. [essentia, Latin.]

1. Essence is but the very nature of any being, whether it be actually existing or no: a rose in Winter has an essence; in Summer it has existence also. Watts.

One thinks the soul is air; another, fire;

Another, blood diffus'd about the heart;

Another faith, the elements conspire,

And to her essence each doth give a part.

I could with the nature of a spirit were more unknown to me than it is, that I might believe its existence, without meddling at all with its essence. Mare.

He wrote the nature of things upon their names: he could view essences in themselves, and read forms without the comment of their respective properties. South.

2. Formal existence; that which makes any thing to be what it is.

The visible church of Jesus is one in outward profession of those things, which supernaturally appertain to the very essence of Christianity, and are necessarily required in every particular Christian man. Hosier.

3. Existence; the quality of being.

In such cogitations have I flood, with such a darkness and heaviness of mind, that I might have been persuaded to have resigned my very essence. Sidney.

4. Being; existent person.

As far as gods, and heav'nly essences,

Can perish.

5. Species of existent being.

Here be four of you, as differing as the four elements; and yet you are friends: as for Eupolis, because he is temperate, and without passion, he may be the fifth essence. Bacon.

6. Constituent substance.

For spirits, when they please,

Can either sex assume, or both; so soft

And uncompos'd are their essence pure;

Not ty'd or manac'd with joint or limb.

7. The cause of existence. This sense is not proper.

She is my essence: and I leave to be,

If I be not by her fair influence

Foster'd, illumin'd, cherish'd, kept alive.

8. [In medicine.] The chief properties or virtues of any simple, or composition collected in a narrow compass.

9. Perfume; odour; scent.

Nor let th' impression of essence exhale.

10. ESSENCE. v. a. [from essen.] To perfume; to scent.

The husband rails, from morning to night, at essenced tops and tawdry courtiers. Addison.

ESSENTIAL. adj. [essentialis, Latin.]

1. Necessary to the constitution or existence of any thing.

The discipline of our church, although it be not an essential part of our religion, should not be rashly altered, as the very substance of our religion will be interested in it. Bacon.

From that original of doing good, that is essential to the infinite being of our Creator, we have an excellent copy transcribed.

This power cannot be innate and essential to matter; and if it be not essential, it is consequently most manifest it could never supervene to it, unless impressed and infused into it by an immortal and divine power.

A great minister puts you a case, and asks your opinion;

N^o XLIX.

but conceals an essential circumstance, upon which the whole weight of the matter turns.

And if each system in gradation roll,

Alike essential to th' amazing whole,

The least confusion but in one, not all

That system only, but the whole must fall.

2. Important in the highest degree; principal.

Judgment's more essential to a general

Than courage.

3. Pure; highly rectified; subtly elaborated; extracted so as to contain all the virtues of its elemental parts contracted into a narrow compass.

The juice of the feed is an essential oil or balm, designed by nature to preserve the feed from corruption.

1. Existence; being.

His utmost ire to the height enrag'd,

Will either quite consume us, or reduce

To nothing this essential.

ESTATE. n. f. [estat, French.]

1. The general interest; the business of the government; the public. In this sense it is now commonly written state.

Many times the things adduced to judgment may be meum & tuum, when the reason and consequence thereof may reach to point of estate: I call matters of estate not only the parts of sovereignty, but whatsoever introduceth any great alteration, or dangerous precedent, or concerneth manifestly any great portion of people. Bacon.

2. Condition of life, with regard to prosperity or adversity.

Thanks to giddy chance,

She cast us headlong from our high estate. Dryden.

3. Condition; circumstances in general.

Truth and certainty are not at all secured by innate principles; but men are in the same uncertain, floating estate with as without them. Locke.

4. Fortune; possession: generally meant of possessions in land, or realities.

She accused us to the king, as though we went about to overthrow him at his own estate. Sidney.

Go, miser! go; for lucre sell thy foul;

Truck wares for wares, and trudge from pole to pole,

That men may say, when thou art dead and gone,

See what a vast estate he left his son! Dryden.

5. Rank; quality.

Who hath not heard of the greatness of your estate? Who seeth not that your estate is much excelled with that sweet uniting of all beauties. Sidney.

6. A person of high rank. This sense is disused.

She is a dutchesse, a great estate. Latimer.

Herod, on his birthday, made a supper to his lords, high captains, and chief estates of Galilee. Mark.

To ESTATE. v. a. [from the noun.] To settle as a fortune.

One man esteems one day above another; another esteems every day alike. Romans.

ESTEEM. n. f. [from the verb.] High value; reverential regard.

Who can see,

Without esteem for virtuous poverty,

Severe Fabricius, or can cease to admire

The ploughman consul in his coarse attire. Dryden.

Both those poets lived in much esteem with good and holy men in orders. Dryden.

I am not uneasy that many, whom I never had any esteem for, are likely to enjoy this world after me. Pope.

ESTEEMER. n. f. [from esteem.] One that highly values; one that sets a high rate upon any thing.

This might instruct the proudest esteemer of his own parts, how useful it is to talk and consult with others. Locke.

ESTIMABLE. adj. [French.]

1. Valuable; worth a large price.

A pound of man's flesh, taken from a man,

Is not so estimable or profitable

As flesh of muttons, beefs, or goats. Shakespeare.

2. Worthy of esteem; worthy of some degree of honour and respect.

A lady said of her two companions, that one was more amiable, the other more estimable.

You lost one who gave hopes of being, in time, every thing that was estimable and good. Temple.

ESTIMABLENESS. n. f. [from estimable.] The quality of deserving regard.

To ESTIMATE. v. a. [estima, Latin.]

1. To rate; to adjust the value of; to judge of any thing by its proportion to something else.

When a man shall sanctify his house to the Lord, then the priest shall estimate it whether it be good or bad: as the priest shall estimate it, so shall it stand. Leviticus.

It is by the weight of silver, and not the name of the piece, that men estimate commodities and exchange them. Locke.

2. To calculate; to compute.

ESTIMATE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Computation; calculation.

Upon a moderate estimate and calculation of the quantity of water now actually contained in the abyss, I found that this alone was full enough to cover the whole globe to the height assigned by Moses. Woodward.

2. Value.

I'd love

My country's good, with a respect more tender,

More holy and profound than mine own life,

My dear wife's estimate, her womb's increase,

The treasure of my loins. Shakespeare.

3. Valuation; alignment of proportional value; comparative judgment.

The only way to come to a true estimate upon the odds betwixt a publick and private life, is to try both. L'Estrange.

Outward actions can never give a just estimate of us, since there are many perfections of a man which are not capable of appearing in actions. Addison.

ESTIMATION. n. f. [from estimate.]

1. The act of adjusting proportional value.

If a man shall sanctify unto the Lord some part of a field, the estimation shall be according to the seed, and homer of barley. Levi.

2. Calculation; computation.

3. Opinion; judgment.

In our own estimate we account such particulars more worthy than those that are already tried and known. Bacon.

4. Esteem; regard; honour.

Crimes there were laid to his charge many, the least whereof being just, had bereaved him of estimation and credit with men. Hobbes.

Of your brace of unprizeable estimations, the one is but frail, and the other casual. Shakespeare.

I know the gentleman

To be of worth and worthy estimation,

And not without desert so well reputed. Shakespeare.

I shall have estimation among the multitude, and honour with the elders. Wisdom.

A plain reason of the publick honours due to the magistrate is, that he may be in due estimation and reverence. Althusius.

ESTIMATIVE. adj. [from estimate.] Having the power of comparing and adjusting the preference.

We find in animals an estimative or judicial faculty, an appetition or aversion, and loco-motive faculty answering the will. Hobbes.

To ESTRANGE. v. a. [estranger, French.]

1. To keep at a distance; to withdraw.

Had we not only cut off their corruptions, but also estranged ourselves from them in things indifferent, who seeth not how greatly prejudicial this might have been to so good a cause? Hobbes.

They know it is our custom of simple reading, not for conversion of infidels estranged from the house of God, but for instruction of men baptized, bred, and brought up in the bosom of the church. Hobbes.

See, she weeps;

Thinks me unkind, or false, and knows not why

I thus estrange my person from her bed. Dryden.

2. To alienate; to divert from its original use or possessor.

They have estranged this place, and have burnt incense in it to other gods. Jeremiah.

3. To alienate from affection; to turn from kindness to malice or indifference.

How comes it now, my husband, oh, how comes it, That thou art thus estranged from thyself?

Thyself I call it, being estranged to me. Shakespeare.

Adam, estranged in look, and alter'd style,

Speech intermitted, thus to Eve renew'd. Milton.

I came to grieve a father's heart estranged;

But little thought to find a mistress estrang'd. Dryden.

I do not know, to this hour, what it is that has estranged him from me. Pope.

TO ETCH. v. a. [etizen, German.]

1. A way used in making of prints, by drawing with a proper needle upon a copper-plate, covered over with a ground of wax, &c. and well blacked with the smoke of a link, in order to take off the figure of the drawing or print; which having its backside tintured with white lead, will, by running over the stricken out lines with a sift, impress the exact figure on the black or red ground; which figure is afterwards with needles drawn deeper quite through the ground, and all the shadows and hatchings put in; and then a wax border being made all round the plate, there is poured on a sufficient quantity of well tempered aqua fortis, which, insinuating into the strokes made by the needles, usually eats, in about half an hour, into the figure of the print or drawing on the copper plate. Harris.

2. To sketch; to draw; to delineate [unless this word be mistaken by Locke for etc.]

There are many empty terms to be found in some learned writers, to which they had recourse to etc. but their systems. Locke.

3. [This word is evidently mistaken by Ray for edge.] To move forwards towards one side.

When we lie long awake in the night, we are not able to rest one quarter of an hour without shifting of sides, or at least etching this way and that way, more or less. Roy.

ETCH. n. f. A country word, of which I know not the meaning.

When they sow their etch crops, they sprinkle a pound or two of clover on an acre. Mortimer.

Where you find sowing of land makes it rank, lay dung upon the etch, and fow it with barley. Mortimer.

ETERNAL. adj. [æternus, Latin.]

1. Without beginning or end.

The eternal God is thy refuge. Deut. xxxiii. 27.

2. Without beginning.

It is a question quite different from our having an idea of eternity, to know whether there were any real being, whose duration has been eternal. Locke.

3. Without end; endless; immortal.

Thou know'st that Banquo and his Fleance lives.
—But in them nature's copy's not eternal. Shakespeare.

4. Perpetual; constant; unintermitting.

Burnt off rings morn and ev'ning shall be thine,
And fires eternal in thy temple shine. Dryden.

5. Unchangeable.

Hobbes believed the eternal truths which he opposed. Dryd.

ETERNAL. n. f. [eternal, French.] One of the appellations of the Godhead.

That law whereby the eternal himself doth work.
The eternal, to prevent such horrid fray,
Hung out of heav'n his golden scales. Milton.

ETERNALIST. n. f. [æternus, Latin.] One that holds the past existence of the world infinite.

I would ask the eternalists what mark is there that they could expect or desire of the novelty of a world, that is not found in this? Or what mark is there of eternity that is found in this? Burart.

TO ETERNALISE. v. a. [from eternal.] To make eternal. Dict.

ETERNALLY. adv. [from eternal.]

1. Without beginning or end.

2. Unchangeably; invariably.

That which is morally good, or evil, at any time, or in any case, must be also eternally and unchangeably so, with relation to that time and to that case. South.

3. Perpetually; without intermission.

Bear me, some god, to Baja's gentle fears,
Or cover me in Umbria's green retreats,
Where western gales eternally reside,
And all the seasons lavish all their pride. Addison.

ETERNNE. adj. [æternus, Latin.] Eternal; perpetual; endless.

The Cyclops hammers fall
On Mars his armour, forg'd for proof eternne. Shakespeare.

ETERNITY. n. f. [æternitas, Latin.]

1. Duration without beginning or end.

In this ground his precious root
Still lives, which, when weak time shall be pour'd out
Into eternity, and circular joys
Dancing an endless round, again shall rise. Craheven.

Thy immortal rhyme
Makes this one short point of time,
To fill up half the orb of round eternity. Cowley.

By repeating the idea of any length of duration which we have in our minds, with all the endless addition of number, we come by the idea of eternity. Locke.

2. Duration without end.

Beyond is all abyss, Eternity, whose end no eye can reach! Milton.

Eternity, thou pleasing, dreadful thought!
Through what variety of untried being,
Through what new scenes and changes must we pass. Add.

TO ETERNIZE. v. a. [æternus, Latin.]

1. To make endless; to perpetuate.

I with two fair gifts
Created him endow'd; with happiness,
And immortality: that fondly lost,
This other serv'd but to eternize woe. Milton.

2. To make for ever famous; to immortalize.

Mankind by all means seeking to eternize himself, so much the more as he is near his end, doth it by speeches and writings. Sidney.

And well becoms all knights of noble name,
That covet in th' immortal book of fame
To be eternized, that live to haunt.

I might relate of shoutings, and their names
Eternize here on earth; but those elect
Angels, contented with their fame in heav'n,
Seek not the praise of men. Milton.

The four great monarchies have been celebrated by the writings of many famous men, who have eternized their fame, and thereby their own. Temple.

- He shall ever love, and always be
The subject of my scorn and cruelty. Dryden.
Mankind is ever the same, and nothing lost of nature, though every thing is altered. Dryden.
Ever since that time Lifander has been at the house. Tauter.
Immortal Vida! on whose honour'd brow
The poet's bays and crick's ivy grow,
Cremona now shall ever boast thy name,
As next in place to Mantua, next in fame. Pope.
3. For ever; eternally; to perpetuity.
Men are like a company of poor insects, whereof some are bees, delighted with flowers and their sweetness; others beetles, delighted with other kinds of viands; which, having enjoyed for a season, they cease to be, and exist no more for ever. Lake.
We'll to the temple: there you'll find your son;
And there be crown'd, or give him up for ever. Philips.
4. It is sometimes reduplicated.
For ever, and for ever, farewell, Cassius. Shakespeare.
I know a lord who values no leaf, though for a thousand years, nor any estate that is not for ever and ever. Temple.
The meeting points the fatal lock deliver
From the fair head, for ever and for ever. Pope.
5. At one time, as, ever and anon: that is, at one time and another; now and then.
So long as Guyon with her communed,
Unto the ground the cast her modest eye;
And ever and anon, with rosy red,
The bashful blood her snowy cheeks did dye. Spenser.
The fat ones would be ever and anon making sport with the lean, and calling them starvelings. L'Estrange.
He lay stretch'd along,
And ever and anon a silent tear
Stole down and trickled from his hoary beard. Dryden.
6. In any degree.
Let no man fear that harmful creature ever the less, because he fees the apostle safe from that poison. Hall.
For a mine undiscovered, neither the owner of the ground or any body else are ever the richer. Callier.
It suffices to the unity of any idea, that it be considered as one representation or picture, though made up of ever so many particulars. Lake.
There must be somewhere such a rank as man;
And all the question, wrangle e'er so long.
Is only this, if God has plac'd him wrong. Pope.
7. A word of enforcement, or aggravation. As soon as ever he had done it; that is, immediately after he had done it. In this sense it is scarcely used but in familiar language.
That ever this fellow should have fewer words than a parrot,
and yet the son of a woman. Shakespeare.
They brake all their bones in pieces, or ever they came at the bottom of the den. Daniel.
That purse in your hand, as a twin brother, is as like him as ever he can look. Dryden.
As soon as e'er the bird is dead,
Opening again, he lays his claim
To half the profit, half the fame. Prior.
The title of duke had been sunk in the family ever since the attainder of the great duke of Suffolk. Addison.
8. EVER A. [Any: as ever; that is, even ich or ever each is each one, all.] This word is still retained in the Scottish dialect.
I am old, I am old.
—I love thee better than I love e'er a scurvy young boy of them all. Shakespeare.
9. It is often contracted into e'er.
10. It is much used in composition in the sense of: always; as, evergreen, green throughout the year; ever-during, enduring without end. It is added almost arbitrarily to neutral participles and adjectives, and will be sufficiently explained by the following instances.
EVERBUBBLING. adj. [ever and bubbling.] Boiling up with perpetual murmurs.
Panting murmurs, still'd out of her breast,
That everbubbling spring. Crashaw.
- EVERBURNING. adj. [ever and burning.] Unextinguished.
His tail was stretched out in wondrous length,
That to the house of heavenly gods it reach'd;
And with extorted power and borrow'd strength,
The everburning lamps from thence it brought. Spenser.
Torture without end
Still urges, and a fiery deluge, fed
With everburning sulphur unconsum'd! Milton.
- EVERDURING. adj. [ever and during.] Eternal; enduring without end.
Our souls, piercing through the impurity of flesh, behold
the highest heavens, and thence bring knowledge to contemplate the everdaring glory and termless joy. Raleigh.
Heav'n open'd wide
Her everdaring gates, harmonious sound!
On golden hinges moving. Milton.
- EVERGREEN. adj. [ever and green.] Verdant throughout the year.
There will I build him
A monument, and plant it round with shade
- Of laurel, evergreen, and branching palm. Milton.
The juice, when in greater plenty than can be exhaled by the sun, renders the plant evergreen. Arbutnot.
- EVERGREEN. n. f. A plant that retains its verdure through all the seasons.
Some of the hardiest evergreens may be transplanted, especially if the weather be moist and temperate. Evelyn.

greens*. Addison.
- EVERHONOURED. adj. [ever and honoured.] Always held in honour or esteem.
Mentes, an everhonour'd name, of old
High in Ulysses' social list enroll'd. Pope.
- EVERLASTING. adj. [ever and lasting.]
1. Lasting or enduring without end; perpetual; immortal;
eternal.
Whether we shall meet again, I know not;
Therefore our everlasting farewell take:
For ever, and for ever, farewell, Cassius. Shakespeare.
The everlasting life, both of body and soul, in that future state, whether in bliss or woe, hath been added. Hammond.
And what a trifle is a moment's breath,
Laid in the scale with everlasting death! Danham.
2. It is used of past as well as future eternity, though not so properly.
EVERLASTING. n. f. Eternity; eternal duration whether past or future.
From everlasting to everlasting thou art God. Psalms.
We are in God through the knowledge which is had of the love which is born towards us, from everlasting. Haker.

That bids me be of comfort any more. Shakespeare.
Many have made themselves everlastingly ridiculous. Swift.
- EVERLASTINGNESS. n. f. [from everlasting.] Eternity; perpetuity; an indefinite duration.
Nothing could make me sooner to confess,
That this world had an everlastingness,
Than to consider that a year is run
Since both this lower world's, and the sun's fun,
The lustre and the vigour of this all,
Did set. Donne.
- EVERLIVING. adj. [ever and living.] Living without end;
immortal; eternal; incessant.
Is not from hence the way, that leadeth right
To that most glorious house, that glitt'reth bright
With burning stars and everliving fires. Spenser.
In that he is man, he received life from the Father, as from the fountain of that everliving Deity. Haker.

exercised for evermore, as the everliving subjects of his reward and punishment. Ralegh.
The instinct of brutes and insects can be the effect of nothing else than the wisdom and skill of a powerful everliving Agent. Newton.
- EVERMORE. adv. [ever and more.] Always; eternally. More seems an expletive accidentally added, unless it signified originally from this time: as, evermore, always henceforward; but this sense has not been strictly preserved.
It govern'd was, and guided evermore,
Through wisdom of a matron grave and hoar. Spenser.
Sparks by nature evermore aspire,
Which makes them now so such a highness flee. Davies.
Religion prefers those pleasures which flow from the presence of God for evermore, infinitely before the transitory pleasures of this world. Tillotson.
- EVEROPEN. adv. [ever and open.] Never closed; not at any time shut.

our actions, and has an everopen ear to hear all our words.
Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
- EVERPLEASING. adj. [ever and pleasing.] Delighting at all times; never ceasing to give pleasure.
The everpleasing Pamela was content to urge a little farther for me. Sidney.
Forfaking Scheria's everpleasing shores,
The winds to Marathon the virgin bore. Pope.
- TO EVERSE. v. a. [everse, Latin.] To overthrow; to subvert; to destroy.
The foundation of this principle is totally *everse*d by the ingenious commentator upon immaterial beings. Glanville.
- TO EVERTE. v. a. [everte, Latin.] To destroy; to overthrow.
A process is valid, if the jurisdiction of the judge is not yet *everte*d and overthrown. Hayfe.
- EVERWATCHFUL. adj. [ever and watchful.] Always vigilant.
Plac'd at the helm he sat, and mark'd the skies,
Nor clos'd in sleep his everwatchful eyes. Pope.
- EVERY. adj. [in old language ewrich, that is, ever each;
æpe ealc, Saxon.]
1. Each one of all. Every has therefore no plural signification.

Full of rose water, and bittersw'd with flowers;

Another bear the ewer; a third a diaper;

And say, wilt please your lordship cool your hands? Shak.

The golden ewer a maid obsequious brings,

Replenish'd from the cool, translucent springs;

With copious water the bright vase supplies

A silver laver, of capacious size:

They wash.

Pope.

EWERY. n. f. [from ewer.] An office in the king's household, where they take care of the linen for the king's table, lay the cloth, and serve up water in silver ewers after dinner.

about nine English miles. Arbuthnot.
The purest exercis of health,
The kind refresher of the summer heats. Thomson.
2. Something done for amusement.
As a watchful king, he would not neglect his safety, thinking nevertheless to perform all things rather as an exercis than as a labour. Bacon's Henry VII.
3. Habitual action by which the body is formed to gracefulness, air, and agility.
He was strong of body, and so much the stronger as he, by a well disciplined exercis, taught it both to do and to suffer.
Sidney.
The French apply themselves more universally to their exercis than any nation: one seldom sees a young gentleman that does not fence, dance, and ride. Addison.
4. Preparatory practice in order to skill: as, the exercis of soldiers.
5. Use; actual application of any thing.
The sceptre of spiritual regimen over us in this present world, is at the length to be yielded up into the hands of the Father which gave it; that is, the use and exercis thereof shall cease, there being no longer on earth any militant church to govern. Huter.
6. Practice; outward performance.
The same prince refused even those of the church of England, who followed their master to St. Germain's, the publick exercis of their religion. Addison.
7. Employment.
The learning of the situation and boundaries of kingdoms, being only an exercis of the eyes and memory, a child with pleasure will learn them.

Children, by the exercis of their senses about objects that affect them in the womb, receive some few ideas before they are born. Let.

Exercis is very alluring and entertaining to the understanding, while its reasoning powers are employed without labour. Huter.

8. Talk; that which one is appointed to perform.
Patience is more oft the exercis
Of saints, the trial of their fortitude,
Making them each his own deliverer,
And victor over all
That tyranny or fortune can inflict. Milton.

9. Act of divine worship whether publick or private.
Good Sir John,
I'm in your debt for your last exercis;
Come the next Sabbath, and I will content you. Shakspeare.

1. The act of exhaling or sending out in vapours; emission.

2. The state of evaporating or flying out in vapours; evaporation.

3. That which rises in vapours, and sometimes takes the form of meteors.

No nat'ral exhalation in the sky,
No 'scape of nature, no distemper'd day,
But they will pluck away its nat'ral cause,
And call them meteors, prodigies, and signs,
Abortives, and presages, tongues of heav'n
Plainly denouncing vengeance upon John.

While moving in so high a sphere, and with so vigorous a lustre, he must needs, as the sun, raise many envious exhalations; which, condensed by a popular odium, are capable to cast a cloud upon the brightest merit and integrity.

Anon, out of the earth, a fabrick huge Rose like an exhalation, with the fount
Of dulcet symphonies and voices sweet.

It is no wonder if the earth be often shaken, there being quantities of exhalations within those mines, or cavernous passages, that are capable of rarefaction and inflammation.

The growing tow'ns like exhalations rise,
And the huge columns heave into the skies.

To EXHA'LE. v. a. [exhale, Latin.]

1. To send or draw out in vapours or fumes.

Yon light is not daylight, I know it well:

It is some meteor that the sun exhales,

To be to thee this night a torch-bearer.

I flattered myself with hopes that the vapour had been exhaled.

Fear freezes minds; but love, like heat,
Exhales the foul sublime to seek her native seat.

2. To draw out.

See, dead Henry's wounds
Open their congeal'd mouths, and bleed afresh!
Blush, bluish, thou lump of foul deformity;
For 'tis thy presence that exhales this blood
From cold and empty veins, where no blood dwells.

EXHA'LEMENT. n. f. [from exhale.] Matter exhaled; vapour.

Ner will polished amber, although it send forth a gross and corporal exhalement, be found a long time defective upon the exactest scales.

To EXHA'UST. v. a.

1. To drain; to diminish; to deprive by draining.

EXHIBITER. n. f. [from exhibit.] He that offers any thing, as a petition or charge, in a publick manner.

He seems indifferent,

Or rather swaying more upon our part,

Than cherishing th' exhibiter against us.

EXHIBITION. n. f. [from exhibit.]

What are all mechanic works, but the sensible exhibition of mathematic demonstrations?

2. Allowance; salary; pension.

I crave fit disposition for my wife,
Due preference of place and exhibition,

As levels with her breeding.

What maintenance he from his friends receives,
Like exhibition thou shalt have from me.

All was assigned to the army and garrisons there, and the received only a pension or exhibition out of his coffers.

He is now neglected, and driven to live in exile upon a small exhibit.

EXHIBITIVE. adj. [from exhibit.] Representative; displaying.

Truths must have an eternal existence in some understanding; or rather, they are the same with that understanding; it self, considered as variously exhibit or representative, according to the various modes of imitability or participation.

EXHILARATE. v. a. [exhilaro, Latin.] To make cheerful; to cheer; to fill with mirth; to enliven; to glad; to gladden.

The coming into a fair garden, the coming into a fair room richly furnished, a beautiful person, and the like, do delight and exhilarate the spirits much.

The force of that fallacious fruit,
That with exhilarating vapours bland
About their spirits had play'd, and inmost pow'rs
Made err, was now exhal'd.

Flows from th' exhilarating fount.

Let them thank

Boon nature, that thus annually supplies
Their vaults, and with her former liquid gifts Exhilarates their languid minds, within
The golden mean confin'd.

EXHILARATION. n. f. [from exhilarate.]

1. The act of giving gaiety.

2. The state of being enlivened.

And therefore exhilaration hath some affinity with joy, though it be a much lighter motion.

To EXHORT. v. a. [exhorter, Latin.] To incite by words to any good action.

We beseech you, and exhort you by the Lord Jesus, that as ye have received of us how you ought to walk, so ye would abound.

My duty is to exhort you to consider the dignity of that holy mystery.

EXHORTATION. n. f. [from exhort.]

1. The act of exhorting; incitement to good.

If we will not encourage publick beneficences, 'till we are secure that no storm shall overturn what we help to build, there is no room for exhortations to charity.

2. The form of words by which one is exhorted.

I'll end my exhortation after dinner.

EXHORTATORY. adj. [from exhort.] Tending to exhort.

EXHORTER. n. f. [from exhort.] One who exhorts or encourages by words.

To EXICCATE. v. a. [exsicco, Latin.] To dry; to dry up.

EXICCATION. n. f. [from exsicco.] Arefaction; act of drying up; state of being dried up.

What is more easily refuted than that old vulgar assertion of an universal drought and excication of the earth? As if the sun could evaporate the least drop of its moisture, so that it should never descend again, but be attracted and elevated quite out of the atmosphere.

EXICCATIVE. adj. [from exsicco.] Drying in quality; having the power of drying.

EXIGENCE. } n. f. [This word is probably only a corruption of exigent, vitiated by an unskilful pronunciation.]

1. Demand; want; need.

As men, we are at our own choice, both for time and place and form, according to the exigence of our own occasions in private.

You have heard what the present condition and exigencies of these several charities are.

While our fortunes exceed not the measure of real convenience, nience, and are adapted to the exigencies of our station, we perceive the hand of providence in our gradual and successive supplies. Rogers's Sermons.

1. Pressing necessity; distress; sudden occasion.

This dissimulation in war may be called stratagem and conduct, in other exigencies address and dexterity. Notes on the Ody.

Now in such exigencies not to need,

Upon my word you must be rich indeed!

A noble superfluity it craves,

Not for yourself, but for your fools and knaves. Pope.

EXIGENT. n. f. [exigens, Latin.]

1. Pressing business; occasion that requires immediate help.

In such an exigent I see not how they could have staid to deliberate about any other regiment than that which already was devised to their hands. Hosier.

The council met, your guards to find you sent,

And know your pleasure in this exigent. Waller.

2. [A law term.] A writ issued when the defendant is not to be found, being part of the process leading to an outlawry. Shakespeare uses it for any extremity. Hammer.

3. End.

These eyes, like lamps whose wasting oil is spent,

Wax dim, as drawing to their exigent. Shakespeare.

EXIGUITY. n. f. [exiguus, Latin.] Smallness; diminutiveness; slenderness.

The exiguity and shape of the extant particles is now supposed. Boyle on Colours.

EXIGUOUS. adj. [exiguus, Latin.] Small; diminutive; little.

Their subtle parts and exiguus dose are consumed and evaporated in less than two hours time. Harvey.

EXILE. n. f. [exilium, Latin.] It seems anciently to have had the accent indifferently on either syllable: now it is uniformly on the first.]

1. Banishment; state of being banished from one's country.

Our state of bodies would bewray what life

We've led since they exile. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

Welcome is exile, welcome were my death. Shakespeare.

Let them pronounce the steep Tarpaeian death,

Vagabond exile, slaying, pent to linger

But with a grain of day, I would not buy

Their mercy at the price of one fair word. Shakespeare.

2. The person banished.

O most wretched exile, ever mourn,

Nor after length of rowling years return? Dryden.

Ulysses, sole of all the victor train,

An exile from his dear paternal coast,

Deplor'd his absent queen, and empire lost. Pope.

EXILE. adj. [exilis, Latin.] Small; slender; not full; not powerful. Not in use, except in philosophical writings.

It were also good to enquire what other means may be to draw forth the exile heat which is in the air; for that may be a secret of great power to produce cold weather. Bacon.

In a virginal, when the lid is down, it maketh a more exile sound than when the lid is open. Bacon's Natural History.

To EXILE. v. a. [from the noun. This had formerly the accent on the last syllable, now generally on the first, though Dryden has used both.] To banish; to drive from a country; to transport.

Call home our exil'd friends abroad,

That fled the snares of watchful tyranny. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

Foul subornation is predominant,

And equity exil'd your highness' land. Shakespeare. Henry VI.

For that offence,

Immediately we do exile him hence. Shakespeare.

They fettered with the bonds of a long night, lay there exiled from the eternal providence. Wisd. xvii. 2.

His brutal manners from his breast exil'd,

His mien he fashion'd, and his tongue he fil'd. Dryden.

Arms and the man I sing, who forc'd by fate,

And haughty Juno's unrelenting hate,

Expell'd and exil'd. Dryden's Virgil's Æn.

EXILEMENT. n. f. [from exile.] Banishment.

Fitzboorn was discarded into foreign service for a pretty shadow of exilement. Wotton.

EXILIATION. n. f. [exiliatio, Latin.] The act of springing or rushing out suddenly.

From salt-petre proceedeth the force and report; for sulphur and small-coal, mixt, will not take fire with noise or exiliatio;

and powder, which is made of impure and greasy petre, hath but a weak emission, and gives but a faint report. Brown.

EXILITY. n. f. [exilis, Latin.] Slenderness; smallness; diminution.

Certain flies, called ephemera, live but a day: the cause is the exility of the spirit, or perhaps the absence of the sun. Bacon.

For exility of the voice, or other sounds, it is certain that the voice doth pass through solid and hard bodies, if they be not too thick; and through water, which is likewise a very close body, and such an one as letteth not in air. Bacon.

A body, by being subtilized, can lose nothing of its corporeity;

neither can it hereby gain any thing but exility; for all degrees of subtilty are essentially the same thing. Græw.

EXIMIOUS. adj. [eximius, Latin.] Famous; eminent; conspicuous; excellent. DiD.

EXINATION. n. f. [exinatio, Latin.] Privation; loss.

He is not more impotent in his glory than he was in his examination. Decay of Poy.

To EXIST. v. n. [existit, Latin.] To be; to have a being.

It is as easy to conceive that an infinite Almighty Power might produce a thing out of nothing, and make that to exist

de novo, which did not exist before; as to conceive the world to have had no beginnings, but to have existed from eternity. Smith's Sermons.

It seems reasonable to enquire, how such a multitude comes to make but one idea, since that combination does not always exist together in nature. Ladd.

One year is past; a different scene!

No farther mention of the dean:

Who now, alas, no more is mit

Than if he never did exist. Swift.

EXISTENCE. n. f. [existentia, low Latin.] State of being;

EXISTENCY. n. f. actual possession of being.

Nor is only the existence of this animal considerable, but many things delivered thereof. Brown.

It is impossible any being can be eternal with successive external physical changes, or variety of states or manner of ex- istence, naturally and necessarily concomitant unto it. Hob.

The soul, secu'd in her existence, smiles

At the drawn dagger and defies its point. Addison.

When a being is considered as possible, it is said to have an essence or nature: such were all things before the creation.

When it is considered as actual, then it is said to have ex- istence also. Watts's Logic.

EXISTENT. adj. [from exist.] In being; in possession of being or of existence.

Whatever sign the sun possessed, whole recess or vicinity deneth the quarters of the year, those seasons were actually existent. Erasmus's Vagan Errours.

The eyes and minds are fastened on objects which have no real being, as if they were truly existent. Dryden.

EXISTIMATION. n. f. [existimatio, Latin.]

1. Opinion.

2. Esteem.

EXIT. n. f. [exit, Latin.]

1. The term set in the margin of plays to mark the time at which the player goes off the stage.

2. Recess; departure; act of quitting the stage; act of quitting the theatre of life.

All the world's a stage,

And all the men and women merely players.

They have their exits and their entrances,

And one man in his time plays many parts. Shakespeare.

A regard for fame becomes a man more towards the exit than at his entrance into life. Swift.

Many of your old comrades live a short life, and make a

3. Passage out of any place.

In such a puerous substance as the brain, they might find an easy either entrance or exit, almost every where. Giamosi.

4. Way by which there is a passage out.

The fire makes its way, forcing the water forth through its ordinary exits, wells, and the outlets of rivers. Wadsworth.

EXITAL. adj. [exitalis, Latin.] Destructive; fatal;

EXITIOUS. adj. mortal.

Most exitial fevers, although not concomitated with the tokens, exanthemata, anthracis, or carbuncles, are to be considered pestilential. Hart.

EXODUS. n. f. [ἔξοδος, Latin.] Departure; journey from a place:

EXODY. n. f. the second book of Moses is so called, because it describes the journey of the Israelites from Egypt.

In all probability their years continued to be three hundred and sixty-five days, ever since the time of the Jewish exodus last. Hall's Origin of Mankind.

EXOLITE. adj. [exolitus, Latin.] Obsolete; out of use. DiD.

To EXOLVE. v. a. [exolvit, Latin.] To loose; to pay. DiD.

EXOPHALLOS. n. f. [ἔξοφος, Latin.] A naval rupture.

To EXONERATE. v. a. [exonerat, Latin.] To unload; to disburthen; to free from any heavy charge.

The glands being a congeries of vessels curled, circumscribed, and complicated, give the blood time to separate through the capillary vessels into the secretory ones, which afterwards

all exonerate themselves into one common ductus. Rey.

EXONERATION. n. f. [from exonerat.] The act of disburthening, or discharging.

The body is adapted unto eating, drinking, nutrition, and other ways of repletion and exoneration. Gram.

EXOPTABLE. adj. [exoptabilis, Lat.] Desirable; to be fought with eagerness or desire.

EXORABLE. adj. [exorabili, Latin.] To be moved by interest.

EXORBITANCE. n. f. [from exorbitant.]

EXORBITANCY. n. f. [from exorbitant.]

1. The act of going out of the track prescribed.

I see some degree of this fault cleave to those, who have eminently corrected all other exorbitancies of the tongue

Government of the Tongue.

2. Enormity; gross deviation from rule or right.
The reverence of my reference may be a curb to your exorbitancies.

The people were grossly imposed on, to commit such exorbitancies as could not end but in the dissolution of the government.

Swift on the Dissol. in Ahen and Rome.

3. Boundless depravity.

They riot still,

Unbounded in exorbitancy of ill.

EXORBITANT. adj. [ex and orbita, Latin.]

Garth.

1. Going out of the prescribed tract; deviating from the course appointed or rule established.

What signifies the fiction of the tortoise riding upon the wings of the wind, but to prescribe bounds and measures to our exorbitant passions?

L'Estrange.

These phenomena are not peculiar to the earthquakes which have happened in our times, but have been observed in all ages, and particularly those exorbitant commotions of the waters of the globe.

Wardour.

2. Anomalous; not comprehended in a settled rule or method.

The Jews, who had laws to particularly determining in all affairs what to do, were notwithstanding continually injured with causes exorbitant, and such as their laws had not provided for.

Hooker.

3. Enormous; beyond due proportion; excessive.

Their subjects would live in great plenty, were not the impositions so very exorbitant; for the courts are too splendid for the territories.

Addison.

So endless and exorbitant are the desires of men, that they will grasp at all, and can form no scheme of perfect happiness with less.

Swift on the Dissol. in Ahen and Rome.

EXORBITATE. v. n. [ex and orbita, Latin.] To deviate; to go out of the track or road prescribed.

The planets sometimes would have approached the sun as near as the orb of Mercury, and sometimes have exorbitated beyond the distance of Saturn.

Bentley.

EXORCISE. v. a. [ἐξερκεῖν.]

1. To adjure by some holy name.
2. To drive away spirits by certain forms of adjuration.
3. To purify from the influence of malignant spirits by religious ceremonies.

And fry'n, that through the wealthy regions run,
Resort to farmers rich, and bless their halls,

And exorcise the beds, and cross the walls.

Dryden.

EXORCISER. n. s. [from exorcise.] One who practises to drive away evil spirits.

EXORCISM. n. s. [ἐξορκισμός.] The form of adjuration, or religious ceremony by which evil and malignant spirits are driven away.

Will his lordship behold and hear our exorcisms? Shakspeare.

Symptoms supernatural, must be only curable by supernatural means; namely, by devout prayers or exorcisms. Harvey.

EXORCIST. n. s. [ἐξορκιστής.]

1. One who by adjurations, prayers, or religious acts, drives away malignant spirits.
2. Then certain of the vagabond Jews, exorcists, took upon them to call over them which had evil spirits.

Act.

3. An enchanter; a conjurer. Improperly.

Soul of Rome!

Thou, like an exorcist, hast conjur'd up
My mortified spirit.

Shakspeare.

Is there no exorcist
Beguiles the truer office of mine eyes?

Is't real that I see?

Shakspeare.

EXORDIUM. n. s. [Latin.] A formal preface; the preemial part of a composition.

Not will I thee detain

With poets fictions, nor oppress thine ear
With circumstance, and long exordium here.

My.

I have been distast'd at this way of writing, by reason of long prefaces and exordiums.

Addison.

EXORNATION. n. s. [exornatio, Latin.] Ornament; decoration; embellishment.

It seemeth that all those curious exornations should rather cease.

Hobbes.

Hyperbolical exornation and elegancies may much affect.

Hale's Origin of Mansind.

EXOSTATED. adj. [exstatu, Latin.] Deprived of bones. Diët.

EXOSTOSIS. n. s. [ix and stosis.] Any protuberance of a bone that is not natural, as often happens in venereal cases. Quincy.

EXOTICUS. adj. [ex and otia, Latin.] Wanting bones; boneless; formed without bones.

Thus we daily ob serve in the heads of fishes, as also in snails and soft exotic animals, nature near the head hath placed a flat white stone, or testaceous concretion.

Brown.

EXOTICK. adj. [ἐξωτικός.] Foreign; not produced in our own country; not domestic.

Some learned men treat of the nature of letters as of some No. LI.

remove exotic thing, whereof we had no knowledge but by fabulous relations.

Continue fresh hot-beds to entertain such exotic plants as arrive not to their perfection without them.

EXOTICK. n. s. A foreign plant.

Claudius was feasted on the other summit, which was barren, and produced, on some spots, plants that are unknown to Italy, and such as the gardeners call exoticks.

To EXPAND. v. a. [expando, Latin.]

1. To spread; to lay open as a net or sheet.
2. To dilate; to spread out every way; to diffuse.

An animal growing, expands its fibres in the air as a fluid.

Along the stream of time thy name

Expanded flies, and gathers all its fame.

EXPANSE. n. s. [expansum, Latin.] A body widely extended without inequalities.

Pope.

A murmuring sound

Of waters issu'd from a cave, and spread
Into a liquid plain; then flood unmov'd,
Pure as th' expanse of heav'n.

Bright as th' ethereal glows the green expanse.

On the smooth expanse of crystal lakes,

The sinking stone at first a circle makes;

The trembling surface, by the motion stirr'd,

Spreads in a second circle, then a third;

Wide, and more wide, the floating rings advance,

Fill all the watry plain, and to the margin dance.

EXPANSIBILITY. n. s. [from expansible.] Capacity of extension; possibility to be expanded or spread into a wider surface.

Together with the rotundity common to the atoms of all fluids, there is some difference in bulk, by which the atoms in one fluid are distinguished from those of another; else all fluids would be alike in weight, expansibility, and all other qualities.

GREU'S Cymology.

EXPANSIBLE. adj. [from expansus, Latin.] Capable to be extended; capable to be spread into a wider surface.

Bodies are not expansible in proportion to their weight, or to the quantity of matter to be expanded.

EXPANSION. n. s. [from expand.]

1. The state of being expanded into a wider surface or greater space.

'Tis demonstrated that the condensation and expansion of any portion of the air is always proportional to the weight and pressure incumbent upon it.

2. The act of spreading out.

The easy expansion of the wing of a bird, and the lightness, strength, and shape of the feathers, are all fitted for her better flight.

3. Extent; space to which any thing is extended.

The capacious mind of man takes its flight farther than the stars, and cannot be confined by the limits of the world: it extends its thoughts often even beyond the utmost expansion of matter, and makes excursions into that incomprehensible inane.

4. Pure space, as distinct from extension in solid matter.

Distance or space, in its simple abstract conception, I call expansion, to distinguish it from extension, which expresses this distance only as it is in the solid parts of matter.

It would for ever take an useless flight,
Lost in expansion, void and infinite

EXPANSIVE. adj. [from expand.] Having the power to spread into a wider surface, or greater space

The elastic or expansive faculty of the air, whereby it dilates itself when compressed, hath been made use of in the common weather-glasses.

Then no more
Th' expansive atmosphere is stamp'd with cold.

To EXPATiate. v. n. [expatiar, Latin.]

1. To range at large; to rove without any prescribed limits.

Religion contracts the circle of our pleasures, but leaves it wide enough for her votaries to expatiate in.

He looks in heav'n with more than mortal eyes,
Bids his free soul expatiate in the skies;

Amidst her kindred stars familiar roam,
Survey the region, and confess her home.

Expatriate free o'er all this scene of man;
A mighty maze! but not without a plan.

And walk delighted, and expatriate round.

2. To enlarge upon in language.

They had a custom of ordering the tongues to Mercury, because they believed him the giver of eloquence: Daciet expatiator upon this custom.

3. To let loose; to allow to range. This sense is very improper. Make choice of a subject, which, being of itself capable of all that colours and the elegance of design can possibly give, shall afterwards afford art an ample field of matter wherein to expatriate itself.

To EXPECT. v. a. [expecto, Latin.]

1. To have a previous apprehension of either good or evil.

2. To

2. To wait for ; to attend the coming.

While, expecting there the queen, he rais'd
His wond'ring eyes, and round the temple gaz'd. Dryden.

To EXPECT. v. n. To wait ; to stay.

Elihu had expected till Job had spoken. Job.

EXPECTABLE. adj. [from expect.] To be expected ; to be hoped or feared.
Occult and spiritual operations are not expectable from ice ; qualities. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EXPECTANCE. } n. f. [from expect.]

EXPECTANCY. }

1. The act or state of expecting ; expectation.

Every moment is expectancy

Shakespeare.

Of more arrivance.

Satyrs leave your petulances,

Or else rail upon the moon,

Your expectance is too soon ;

For before the second cock

Crow, the gates will not unlock.

This blessed expectance must be now my theme. Boyle.

But fy, my wand'ring mule, how thou do'st stay ! Milton.

Expectance calls thee now another way.

2. Something expected.

There is expectance here from both the sides,

What further you will do. Shakespeare.

3. Hope ; that of which the expectation is accompanied with pleasure.

Oh, what a noble mind is here o'erthrown !

The expectancy and role of the fair state. Shakespeare.

Her majesty has offered concessions, in order to remove scruples raised in the mind of the expectant heir. Swift.

EXPECTANT. n. f. [from expect.] One who waits in expectation of any thing ; one held in dependence by his hopes.

They, vain expectants of the bridal hour,

My stores in riotous expence devour. Pope.

This treatise was agreeable to the sentiments of the whole nation, except of those gentlemen who had employments, or were expectants. Swift to Pope.

EXPECTATION. n. f. [expectatio, Latin.]

1. The act of expecting.

The trees

Should have borne men, and expectation fainted,

Longing for what it had not. Shakespeare.

The rest,

That are within the note of expectation,

Already are 't' th' court. Shakespeare.

2. The state of expecting either with hope or fear.

Live in a constant and serious expectation of that day, when we must appear before the judge of heaven and earth. Rogers.

3. Prospect of any thing good to come.

My soul, wait thou only upon God ; for my expectation is from him. Psalms.

4. The object of happy expectation ; the Messiah expected.

Now clear I understand,

What oft my steadfast thoughts have search'd in vain,

Why our great expectation should be call'd

The feed of woman. Milton.

5. A state in which something excellent is expected from us.

How fit it will be for you, born so great a prince, and of so rare not only expectation but proof, to divert your thoughts from the way of goodness. Sidney.

You first come home

From travel with such hopes as made you look'd on,

By all mens eyes, a youth of expectation ;

Pleas'd with your growing virtue, I receiv'd you. Ottway.

EXPECTER. n. f. [from expect.]

1. One who has hopes of something.

The e are not great expecters under your administration,

according to the period of governors here. Swift.

2. One who waits for another.

Signify this loving interview

To the expecters of our Trojan part. Shakespeare.

To EXPECTORATE. v. a. [ex and pectus, Latin.] To eject from the breast.

Excrementitious humours are expectorated by a cough after a cold or an asthma. Harvey.

Morbick matter is either attenuated so as to be returned into the channels, or expectorated by coughing. Arbuthnot.

EXPECTORATION. n. f. [from expectorate.]

1. The act of discharging from the breast.

That discharge which is made by coughing, as bringing up phlegm, or any thing that obstructs the vessels of the lungs, and strengthens the breath. Quincy.

With water, vinegar, and honey, in pleurifies and inflammations of the lungs, he mixeth spices, for promoting expectoration.

EXPECTORATIVE. adj. [from expectorate.] Having the quality of promoting expectoration.

Syrups and other expectatives, in coughs, must necessarily occasion a greater cough. Harvey.

EXPEDIENCE. } n. f. [from expedire.]

EXPEDIENCY. }

1. Fitness ; propriety ; suitability to an end.

Solemn dedications of things set apart for Divine Worship could never have been universally practised, had not right reason dictated the high expedency and great use of such practices. Saunders's Sermons.

2. It is used in Shakespeare for expedition ; adventure ; attempt.

Let me hear

What yesternight our council did decree,

In forwarding this dear expedience. Shakespeare.

3. It is also used by Shakespeare for expedition ; haste ; dispatch.

I shall break

The cause of our expedience to the queen,

And get her leave to part. Shakespeare.

Eight tall ships, three thousand men of war,

Are making hither with all due expedience. Shakespeare.

EXPEDIENT. adj. [expedit, Latin.]

1. Proper ; fit ; convenient ; suitable.

All things are not expedient : in things indifferent there is a choice ; they are not always equally expedient. Hobbes.

When men live as if there were no God, it becomes expedient for them that there should be none ; and then they endeavour to persuade themselves so. Twiss.

2. In Shakespeare, quick ; expeditious.

The adverse winds,

Whose leisure I have staid, have given him time

To land his legions all as soon as I :

His marches are expedient to this town. Shakespeare.

EXPEDIENT. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. That which helps forward ; as means to an end

God, who delights not to grieve the children of men, does not project for our sorrow, but our innocence ; and would never have invited us to the one, but as an expedient to the other. Dungliff.

2. A shift ; means to an end which are contrived in an emergency.

Th' expedient pleas'd, where neither lost his right ;

Mars had the day, and Venus had the night. Dryden.

He flies to a new expedient to solve the matter, and suggests an earth of a make and frame like that of Des Cartes. Watts.

EXPEDIENTLY. adv. [from expedient.]

1. Fitly ; suitably ; conveniently.

Fidly ; suitably ; conveniently.

2. Hastily ; quickly.

Let my officers of such a nature

Make an extent upon his house and lands :

Do this expediently, and turn him going. Shakespeare.

To EXPEDITE. v. a. [expedit, Latin.]

1. To facilitate ; to free from impediment.

By fin and death a broad way now is pay'd,

To expedite your glorious march. Milton.

2. To hasten ; to quicken.

An inquisition would still be a further improvement, and would expedite the conversion of the Papists. English.

3. To dispatch ; to issue from a public office.

Before this explanation be condemned, and the bill founded upon it, some lawyers should fully inform the jury. Swift.

EXPLANATORY. adj. [from explain.] Containing explanation.

Had the printer given me notice, I would have printed the names, and writ explanatory notes. Swift.

EXPLETIVE. n. f. [expletivum, Latin.] Something used only to take up room; something of which the use is only to prevent a vacancy.

These are not only useful expletives to matter, but great ornaments of style. Swift.

Of the ear the open vowels tire,

While expletives their feeble aid do join. Pope.

Another nicety is in relation to expletives, whether words or syllables, which are made use of purely to supply a vacancy; ds, before verbs plural, is absolutely such; and future verbs may explode did and do. Pope.

EXPLICABLE. adj. [from explicare.] Explainable; possible to be explained.

Many difficulties, scarce explicable with any certainty, occur in the fabric of human nature. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Great variety there is in compound bodies, and little many of them seem to be explicable. Boyle.

TO EXPLICATE. v. a. [explicare, Latin.]

1. To unfold; to expand.

'They explicate the leaves, and ripen food

For the silk labourers of the mulberry wood. Blochier.

2. To explain; to clear; to interpret.

'They do not understand that part of Christian philosophy which explicates the secret nature of this divine sacrament. Taylor's Worthiness.

Although the truths may be elicited and explicated by the contemplation of animals, yet they are more clearly evidenced in the contemplation of man. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

The last verse of his last satyr is not yet sufficiently explicated. Dryden.

EXPLICATION. n. f. [from explicare.]

1. The act of opening; unfolding or expanding.

2. The act of explaining; interpretation; explanation.

'The church preacheth, first publishing, by way of testimony, the truth which from them she hath received, written in the sacred volumes of Scripture; secondly, by way of explication, discovering the mysteries which lie hid therein. Hale.

Many things are needful for explication, and many for application unto particular occasions. Hale.

Allowances are made in the explication of our Saviour's parables, which he hid only as to the main scope. Barrow.

3. The sense given by an explainer; interpretation.

'Tis the substance of this theory I mainly depend upon: many single explications and particularities may be recited upon farther thoughts. Barrow.

EXPLICATIVE. adj. [from explicare.] Having a tendency to explain.

If the term which is added to the subject of a complex proposition be either essential or only way necessary to it, then it is called explicative; for it only explains the subject, as every mortal man is a son of Adam. Wren's Logic.

EXPLICATOR. n. f. [from explicare.] Expounder; interpreter; explainer.

EXPLICIT. adj. [explicitus, Latin.] Unfolded; plain; clear; not obscure; not merely implied.

We must lay aside that lazy and fallacious method of concluding by the lump, and bring things close to explicit proof and evidence. Barrow.

These speculations, when most refined, serve only to show how how impossible it is for us to have a clear and explicit notion of that which is infinite. South.

EXPLICITLY. adv. [from explicit.] Plainly; directly; not merely by inference or implication.

This querulous humour carries an implicit repugnance to God's disposal; but where it is indulged, it usually is its own expiator, and explicitly avows it. Govern. of the Tongue.

TO EXPLODE. v. a. [explodere, Latin.]

1. To drive out disgracefully with noisy noise of contempt; to treat with open contempt; to treat not only with neglect, but open disdain or scorn.

Him old and young
Exploded, and had seiz'd with violent hands,
Had not a cloud descending snatch'd him thence Unseen amid the throng. Milton.

Thus was th' applause they meant,
Turn'd to exploding hiss, triumph to shame,
Cait on themselves from their own mouths. Milt n.
Old age explodes all but morality. Roscommon.

There is pretended, that a magnetical globe or terrella, being placed upon its poles, would have a constant rotation; but this is commonly exploded, as being against all experience. Wilkins.

Shall that man pass for a proficient in Christ's school, who would have been exploded in the school of Zeno or Epictetus. South.

Provided that no word, which a society shall give a sanction to, be afterwards antiquated and exploded, they may receive whatever new ones they shall find occasion for. Swift.

2. To drive out with noise and violence.

But late the kindled powder did explode
The maffy ball, and the brass tube unload. Blackmore.
EXPLODER. n. f. [from explode.] An hisser; one who drives out any person or thing with open contempt.

EXPLOIT. n. f. [exploitum, Latin, res et plecta.] A design accomplished; an achievement; a successful attempt.

Know'st thou not any whom corrupting gold
Would tempt into a cloie exploit of death? Shakespeare.

Flight cannot stain the honour you have won;
But mine it will, that no exploit have done. Shakespeare.

How shall I relate
To human sense th' invisible exploits
Of warring spirits? Milton.

He breaks hence Hannibal's insulting heats;
Of which exploits thou our friend Ennius treats. Denham.

Will you thus dishonour
Your past exploits, and fully all your wars? Addison.

TO EXPLOIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To perform; to achieve.

He exploited great matters in his own person in Gallia, and by his son in Spain. Camden.

TO EXPLORE. v. a. [explorare, Latin.] To search out; to try by searching.

Snails exclude their horns, and therewith explore their way. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EXPLORATION. n. f. [from explore.] Search; examination.

For exact exploration they should be suspended where the air is quiet, that, clear of impediments, they may the more freely convert upon their natural verities. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Use may be made of the like way of exploration in that enquiry which puzzles so many modern naturalists. Boyle.

EXPLORATOR. n. f. [from explore.] One who searches; a searcher; an examiner.

EXPORATORY. a. j. [from explore.] Searching; examining.

TO EXPLORE. v. a. [explorare, Latin.] To try; to search into; to examine by trial.

Abdiel that fight endur'd not, where he flood
Among the mightiest, bent on highest deeds,
And thus his own undaunted heart explores. Milton.

Divers opinions I have been inclined to question, not only as a naturalist, but as a chymist, whether they be agreeable to true grounds of philosophy, or the exploring experiments of the fire. Boyle.

But Capys, and the rest of founder mind,
The fatal present to the flames design'd,
Or to the wat'ry deep, at least to bore
The hollow sides, and hidden fountains explore. Dryden.

The mighty Stagyrte first left the shore,
Spread all his sails, and durst the deeps explore;
He steer'd securely, and discover'd far,
Led by the light of the Meæonian star. Pope.

EXPLOREMENT. n. f. [from explore.] Search; trial.

The frustrated search of Poerta, upon the explorement of many, could scarce find one. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EXPLOSION. n. f. [from explodere.] The act of driving out any thing with noise and violence.

I those parts which abound with strata of stone, or marble, making the strongest opposition, are the most furiously shattered; an event observable not only in this, but all other explosions whatever. Woodward.

NO LI.

In gunpowder the charcoal and sulphur easily take fire, and set fire to the nitre; and the spirit of the nitre being thereby rarified into vapour, rushes out with explosion, after the manner that the vapour of water rushes out of an æolipile; the sulphur also, being volatile, is converted into vapour, and augments the explosion. Newton.

With explosion vast,
The thunder raises his tremendous voice.

EXPLOSIVE. adj. [from explodere.] Driving out with noise and violence.

These minerals constitute in the earth a kind of natural gunpowder, which takes fire; and by the assistance of its explosive power, renders the shock greater. Woodward.

EXPONENT. n. f. [from exponere, Latin.]

Exponent of the ratio, or proportion between any two numbers or quantities, is the exponent arising when the antecedent is divided by the consequent: thus six is exponent of the ratio which thirty hath to five. Also a rank of numbers in arithmetical progression, beginning from 0, and placed over a rank of numbers in geometrical progression, are called indices or exponents: and in this is founded the reason and demonstration of logarithms; for addition and subtraction of these exponents answers to multiplication and division in the geometrical numbers. Harris.

EXPONENTIAL. adj. [from exponent.]

Exponential curves are such as partake both of the nature of algebraick and transcendental ones. They partake of the former, because they consist of a finite number of terms, though those terms themselves are indeterminate; and they are in some measure transcendental, because they cannot be algebraically constructed. Harris.

TO EXPORT. v. a. [exportare, Latin.] To carry out of a country, generally in the way of traffick.

Glorious followers taint business for want of secrecy, and export honour from a man, and make him a return in envy. Bacon.

Edward III. by his encouragement of trade, turned the scale so much in favour of English merchandize, that, by a balance of trade taken in his time, the exported commodities amounted to two hundred ninety-four thousand pounds, and the imported but to thirty-eight thousand. Addison.

Great ships brought from the Indies precious wood, and exported pearls and robes. Arbutnot.

EXPORT. n. f. [from the verb.] Commodity carried out in traffick.

EXPORTATION. n. f. [from export.] The act or practice of carrying out commodities into other countries.

The cause of a kingdom's thriving is fruitfulness of soil to produce necessities, not only sufficient for the inhabitants, but for exportation into other countries. Swift.

EXPORTER. n. f. [from export.] He that carries out commodities, in opposition to the importer, who brings them in.

Money which is weight, according to its denomination by the standard of the mint, will be that which will be melted down, or carried away in coin by the exporter, whether the pieces of each species be by the law bigger or less. Locke.

TO EXPOSE. v. a. [exponere, exposui, Latin, exponere, French.]

1. To lay open; to make liable to.

Take phycick, pomp;
Expose thyself to feel what wretches feel,
That thou may'st shake the superflux to them,
And new heaven j'ust.

Who here
Will envy whom the high tide place exposes
Foremost to stand against the Thunderer's aim? Milton.

To pass the ripper period of his age,
Acting his part upon a crowded stage,
To lasting toils expos'd, and endless cares,
To open dangers, and to secret snares. Prior.

2. To put in the power of any thing.

But still he held his purpose to depart;
For as he lov'd her equal to his life,
He would not to the seas expose his wife. Dryden.

3. To lay open; to make bare; to put in a state of being acted upon.

Then joyous birds frequent the lonely grove,
And beasts, by nature strong, renew their love;
Then fields the blades of bury'd corn disclose,
And while the balmy western spirit blows,
Earth to the breath her bosom dares expose. Dryden.

4. To lay open to censure or ridicule; to show in such a state as brings contempt.

Like Horace, you only expose the follies of men, without arraigning their vices. Dryden.

Tully has justly exposed a precept, that a man should live with his friend in such a manner, that if he became his enemy, it should not be in his power to hurt him. Addison.

A fool might once himself alone expose;
Now one in verse makes many more in prose.
Your fame and your property suffer alike, you are at once expos'd and plundered. Pope.

5. To lay open to examination.

8 Q

Thofe

Those who seek truth only, freely expose their principles to the test, and are pleased to have them examined. Locke.
 6. To put in danger.
 The exposing himself notoriously did sometimes change the fortune of the day, when his troops began to give ground. Clarendon.

7. To cast out to chance.
 A father, unnaturally careless of his child, gives him to another man; and he again expos him: a third man finding him, breeds up and provides for him as his own. Locke.
 Helpless and naked on a woman's knees,
 To be expos'd or rear'd as she may please. Prior.
 Feel her neglect, and pine from her disface.
 8. To censure; to treat with dispraise. A colloquial abuse of the word.

A little wit is equally capable of exposing a beauty, and of aggravating a fault. Addison.

EXPOSITION. n. f. [from expos.]
 1. The situation in which any thing is placed with respect to the sun or air.

Water he chuses clear, light, without taste or smell; drawn not from snow, but from springs with an easterly exposition. Arbutnot.

The diversity of exposition of the several kitchens in this city, whereby some receive the rays of the sun sooner, and others later, will occasion great irregularity as to the time of dining. Arbutnot.

2. Explanation; interpretation: [from expon and expon, Latin.]
 My lord of York, it better shew'd with you,
 When that your flock, assembled by the bell,
 Encircled you, to hear with reverence
 Your exposition on the holy text. Shakespeare.

You are a worthy judge;
 You know the law: your exposition
 Hath been most found. Shakespeare.
 I have sometimes very boldly made such expositions of my authors, as no commentator will forgive me: Dryden.
EXPOSTOR. n. f. [expositor, Latin.] Explainer; expounder; interpreter.

A mirth-moving jest,
 Which his fair tongue, conceit's expositor,
 Delivers in such apt and gracious words,
 'That aged ears play truant at his tales. Shakespeare.
 In the picture of Abraham's sacrificing his son, Isaac is described as a little boy, which is not conscientious unto the authority of expositors. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The sinner's conscience is the best expositor of the mind of God, under any judgment or affliction. South.
 Commentators and scholiasts, those copious expositors of places, pour out a vain overflow of learning on passages plain and easy. Locke.

TO EXPOSTULATE. v. n. [expostulo, Latin.] To canvass with another; to altercation; to debate without open rupture.

More bitterly could I expostulate,
 Save that for reverence of some alive
 I give a sparing limit to my tongue. Shakespeare.
 The emperor's ambassador did expostulate with the king, that he had broken his league with the emperor. Hayward.
 It is madness for friendless and unarmed innocence to expostulate with invincible power. L'Estrange.
 Durst I expostulate with Providence, I then might ask. Cotton.
 The bishop will expostulate, and the tenant will regard to the reasonableness of the demand, rather than engage in a suit. Swift.

EXPOSTULATION. n. f. [from expostulate.]
 1. Debate; altercation; discussion of an affair in private without rupture.

Expostulations end well between lovers, but ill between friends. Spectator.

2. Charge; accusation.
 This makes her bleeding patients to accuse
 High heav'n, and these expostulations use;
 Could nature then no private woman grace,
 Whom we might dare to love, with such a face? Waller.
Expostulation is a private accusation of one friend touching another, supposed not to have dealt singly or confidently in the course of good friendship. Ayliffe.

EXPOSTULATOR. n. f. [from expostulate.] One that debates without without open rupture.

EXPOSTULATORY. adj. [from expostulate.] Containing expostulation.
 This fable is a kind of an expostulatory debate between bounty and ingratitude. L'Estrange.

EXPOSURE. n. f. [from expos.]
 1. The act of exposing or setting out to observation.

2. The state of being open to observation.
 When we have our naked frailties hid,
 That suffer in exposure, let us meet. Shakespeare.
 3. The state of being exposed, or being liable to any thing.
 Determine on some course,
 More than a wild exposure to each chance
 That starts i' th' way before thee. Shakespeare.
 4. The state of being in danger.

Ajax sets Theristes
 To match us in comparisons with dirt;
 To weaken and discredit our exposure,
 How hard soever rounded in with danger. Shakespeare.
 5. Exposition; the situation in which the sun or air is received.
 The cold now advancing, let such plants as will not endure the house, in pots two or three inches lower than the surface of some bed, under a southern exposure. Engen.

TO EXPOSURE. v. a. [expos, Latin.]
 1. To explain; to clear; to interpret; to shew the meaning of.

that pamphlet a few notorious fallhoods. Swift.

EXTRACT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The substance extracted; the chief parts drawn from any thing.

In tinctures, if the superfluous spirit of wine be distilled off, it leaves at the bottom that thicker substance, which chymists call the extract of the vegetables. Boyle.

To dip our tongues in gall, to have nothing in our mouth but the extract and exhalation of our inward bitterness, is no great felicity. Government of the Tongue.

2. The chief heads drawn from a book; an abstract; an epitome.

I will present a few extracts out of authors. Camden.
Some books may be read by extracts made of them by others,

EXT

but only in the less important arguments, and the meaner books; else distilled books are like common distilled waters, flashy things. Bacon's Essays.

Spend some hours every day in reading, and making extracts, if your memory be weak. Swift.

EXTRACTION. n. f. [extractio, Latin.]

1. The act of drawing one part out of a compound; the act of drawing out the principal substance by chemical operation.

Although the charge of extraction should exceed the worth,
at least it will discover nature and possibility. Bacon.

They have fallen upon the distillations of waters, extractions of oils, and such like experiments unknown to the ancients.

It would not defray the charge and labour of the extraction, and must needs be all irretrievably lost. Woodward.

2. Derivation from an original; lineage; descent.

One whole extraction from an ancient line,
Gives hope again that well-born men may shine;
The meanest in your nature mild and good,
The noble rest secured in your blood. Waller.

A family of an ancient extraction, transported with the conqueror out of Normandy. Clarendon.

EXTRACTOR. n. f. [Latin.] The person or instrument by which any thing is extracted.

EXTRACTIONARY. adj. [extra et dicitur, Latin.] Not consisting in words but realities.

citation of all persons concerned, may be said to be done extrajudicially, when opposition ensues thereupon. Argyll.

EXTRAMISSED. n. f. [extra et missa, Latin.] The act of emitting outwards; opposite to intromission.

Aristotle, Alhazen, and others, hold that sight is by reception, and not by extramission; by receiving the rays of the object into the eye, and not by sending any out. Brown.

EXTRAMUNDANE. adj. [extra et mundus, Latin.] Beyond the verge of the material world.

'Tis a philosophy that gives the exactest topography of the extramundane spaces. Gloucester.

EXTRANEOUS. adj. [extraneus, Latin.] Not belonging to any thing; foreign; of different substance; not intrinsic.

Relation is not contained in the real existence of things, but something extraneous and superinduced. Locke.

When the mind refers any of its ideas to any thing extraneous to them, they are then called true or false. Locke.

Gold, when equally pure, and freed from extraneous matter, is absolutely alike in colour, consistence, specific gravity, and all other respects. Woodward on Fossils.

EXTRAORDINARILY. adv. [from extraordinarius.]

1. In a manner out of the common method and order.

In the affairs which were not determinable one way or other by the Scripture, himself gave an extraordinarily direction and counsel, as oft as they sought it at his hand. Hosier.

In government it is good to use men of one rank equally;
for to countenance some extraordinarily, is to make them insolent, and the rest discontent. Bacon's Essays.

2. Uncommonly; particularly; eminently; remarkably.

He quotes me right; and I hope all his quotations, wherein he is so extraordinarily copious and elaborate, are so. Hosier.

The temple of Solomon was a type, and therefore was so extraordinarily magnificent; otherwise perhaps a cheaper structure might have been as serviceable. Wilkins.

EXTRAORDINARINESS. n. f. [from extraordinarius.] Uncommonness; eminence; remarkableness.

I chuse some few, which either for the extraordinariness of their guilt, or the frequency of their practice, are the most eminent. Government of the Tongue.

EXTRAORDINARY. adj. [extraordinarius, Lat.] This word and its derivatives are generally pronounced extraordinary, whereby the a is liquified into the e.

1. Different from common order and method; not ordinary.

Evils must be judged inevitable, if there be no apparent ordinary way to avoid them; because where council and advice bear rule of God's extraordinary power, without extraordinary warrant, we cannot presume. Hosier.

At that time Spain had no other wars, save those which were grown into an ordinary: now they have coupled therewith the extraordinary of the Voltaine and the Palatine. Bacon.

Let us see what extraordinary armies have been transmitted thither, and what ordinary forces have been maintained there.

2. Different from the common course of law.

If they proceeded in a martial or any other extraordinary way, Davies's State of Ireland.

way, without any form of law, his majesty should declare his justice and affection to an old faithful servant. Clarendon.

3. Lminent; remarkable; more than common.
The house was built of fair and strong stone, not affecting so much any extraordinary kind of fineness, as an honourable representing of a firm flatline. Sidney.

The Indians worshipped rivers, fountains, rocks, or great stones, &c. and all things which seemed to have something extraordinary in them. Still neglect.

- EXTRAORDINARY. adv. [This word seems only a colloquial barbarism, used for the ease of pronunciation.] Extraordinarily.

7. Irregularity; wildness.

3. Courage; violence; outrageous vehemence.

How many, by the wild fury and extravagance of their own passions, have put their bodies into a combustion, and by stirring up their rage against others, have armed that fierce humour against themselves. Tillotson's Sermon.

4. Unnatural tumour; bombast.

I remember some verses of my own, Maximin and Almanzor, which cry vengeance upon me for their extravagance. Dryden's Spanish Fryar, Dedication.

5. Waste; vain and superfluous expence.

She used to come home in her cups, and break the china and the looking-glasses; and was of such an irregular temper, and so entirely given up to her passion, that you might argue as well with the North wind as with her ladyship; so expensive, that the income of three dukes was not enough to supply her extravagance. Arbutnot.

- EXTRAVAGANT. adj. [extravaganti, Latin.]

1. Wandering out of his bounds. This is the primogenial fence, but not now in use.

At his warning

The extravagant and erring spirit hies

To his confine. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

2. Roving beyond just limits or prescribed methods.

I dare not ask for what you would not grant:

But witness, madam, are extravagant;

They are not bounded with things possible;

I may with more than I presume to tell. Dryden.

3. Not comprehended in anything.

Twenty constitutions of pope John XXII. are called the extravagants; for that they being written in no order or method, vagant extra corpus collectionum canonum. Ayliffe's Parergon.

4. Irregular; wild.

For a dance they seem'd

Somewhat extravagant, and wild. Milton.

There appears something nobly wild and extravagant in great natural geniuses, infinitely more beautiful than turn and polishing. Addison's Spectator.

New ideas employed my fancy all night, and compos'd a wild extravagant dream. Addison.

5. Wasteful; prodigal; vainly expensive.

An extravagant man, who has nothing else to recommend him but a false generosity, is often more beloved than a person of a much more finished character, who is defective in this particular. Addison's Spectator.

- EXTRAVAGANT. n. f. One who is confined in no general rule or definition.

We pity or laugh at those fatuous extravagants. Glanville.
There are certain extravagants among people of all ages and professions; and there must be no drawing of general rules from particular exceptions. L'Estrange.

- EXTRAVAGANTLY. adv. [from extravagant.]

1. In an extravagant manner; wildly.

Her passion was extravagantly new;

But mine is much the madder of the two. Dryden.

Some are found to praise our author, and others as rashly and extravagantly contradict his admirers. Pope.

To EXTRAVAGATE. v. a. [extra and vagar, Latin.] To wander out of limits.

- EXTRAVASATED. adj. [extra and vasa, Latin.] Forced out of the properly containing vessels.

The viscous matter, which lies like leather upon the extravasated blood of pleurietick people, may be dissolved by a due degree of heat. Arbutnot on diabetes.

- EXTRAVASATION. n. f. [from extravasated.] The act of forcing, or state of being forced out of the proper containing vessels.

Aliment, too viscous, obstructing the glands, and by its acrimony corroding the small vessels of the lungs, after a rupture and extravasation of blood, easily produces an ulcer. Arbutnot on diabetes.

- EXTRAVENTATE. adj. [extra and vena, Latin.] Let out of the veins.

That there is a magnetick way of curing wounds, by anointing the weapon; and that the wound is affected in like manner as is the extraneous blood by the sympathetick medicines, so to matter of fact, is with circumstances of good evidence asserted. Glanville.

- EXTRAVERSION. n. f. [extra and verso, Latin.] The act of throwing out; the state of being thrown out.

Nor does there intervene heat to afford them any colour to pretend that there is made an extraversion of the sulphur, or of any of the two other supposed principles. Boyle.

- EXTRAUGHT. part. [This is an obsolete participle from extrahere; as disdraught from distrahere.] Extracted.

Sham! thou not, knowing whence thou art extravagant, to let thy tongue detect thy baseborn heart! Shakspeare.

- EXTREME. adj. [extremus, Latin.] This word is sometimes corrupted by the superlative termination, of which it is by no means capable, as it has in itself the superlative signification.

1. Greatest; of the highest degree.

He that will take away extreme heat by setting the body in extremity of cold, shall undoubtedly remove the disease; but together with it the diseased too. Haller.

The Lord shall smite thee with a fever, an inflammation, and an extreme burning. Deuter. xxviii. 22.

They thought it the extremity of evils to put themselves at the mercy of those hungry and disorderly people. Rum.

That on the sea's extremest borders flood. Alfijn.

3. Last; that beyond which there is nothing.

Farewell, ungrateful and unkind! I go,

Condemn'd by thee, to those sad shades below:

I go th' extremest remedy to prove,

To drink oblivion, and to drench my love. Dryden.

4. Pressing in the utmost degree.

Cases of necessity being sometime but urgent, sometimes extreme, the consideration of publick utility is urged equivalent to the easier kind of necessity. Haller.

- EXTREME. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. Utmost point; highest degree of any thing.

Thither by happy-footed furies hal'd,

At certain revolutions, all the damn'd

Are brought; and feel by turns the bitter change

Of fierce extremes, extremes by change more fierce;

From beds of raging fire to starve in ice

Their soft ethereal warmth, and there to pine

Immoveable, infix'd, and frozen round

Periods of time; thence hurried back to fire. Milton.

Avoid extremes, and shun the faults of such

Who still are pleas'd too little, or too much. Pope.

They cannot bear that human nature, which they know to be imperfect, should be praised in an extreme, without opposition. Page's Essay on Honour.

2. Points at the greatest distance from each other, extremity.

The true Protestant religion is seated in the golden mean; the enemies unto her are the extremes on either hand. Rum.

The syllogistical form only shows, that if the intermediate idea agrees with those it is on both sides immediately applied to, then those two remote ones, or, as they are called, extremes, do certainly agree.

- EXTREMELY. adv. [from extreme.]

1. In the utmost degree.

She might hear, not far from her, an extremely doleful voice; but so suppressed with a kind of whispering noise, that he could not conceive the words distinctly. Boyle.

2. Very much; greatly; in familiar language.

Whoever fees a fountein in a gown reeling home at midnight, is apt to be extremely comforted in his own vices. Swift.

- EXTREMITY. n. f. [extremities, Latin.]

1. The utmost point; the highest degree.

He that will take away extreme heat by setting the body in extremity of cold, shall undoubtedly remove the disease; but together with it the diseased too. Haller.

Should any one be cruel and uncharitable to that extremity, yet this would not prove that propriety gave any authority.

2. The utmost parts; the parts most remote from the middle. It is commonly set forth green or yellow: in its proper colour it is inclining to white, excepting the extremities or tops of the wing-feathers, which are black.

The extremities of the joints must be seldom hidden, and the extremities or end of the feet never.

The extremity of pain often creates a coldness in the extremities; but such a sensation is very consistent with an inflammatory distemper.

I with peace, and any terms prefer Before the last extremities of war.

To EXTRICATE. v. a. [extricare, Latin.] To disentangle; to set free any one in a state of perplexity; to disentangle.

We run into great difficulties about free created agents, which reason cannot well extricate itself out of.

These are great reliefs to nature, as they give her an opportunity of extricating herself from her oppressions, and recovering the several tones and springs of her distended vessels.

EXTRICATION. n. f. [from extricare.] The act of disentangling; disentangling.

Crude salt has a taste not properly acid, but such as pre-exists in brine; and it does not appear, that this acid spirit did as such pre-exist in the salt whence it was obtained, so that we may suppose it to have been made rather by transmutation than extrication.

EXTRINSICAL. adj. [extrinsecus, Latin.] External; outward; not intimately belonging; not intrinsic. It is commonly written fu, but analogy requires tu instead.

A body cannot move, unless it be moved by some extrinsecal agent: we may easily frame a conceit, how absurd it is to think that a body, by a quality in it, can work upon itself.

Neither is the atom by any extrinsecal impulse diverted from its natural course.

Outward objects, that are extrinsecal to the mind; and its own operations, proceeding from powers intrinsic, and proper to itself, which, when reflected on by itself, become also objects of its contemplation, are the original of all knowledge.

EXTRINSECALLY. adv. [from extrinsecus.] From without.

If to suppose the soul a distinct substance from the body, and extrinsecally adventitious, be an error, almost all the world hath been mistaken.

EXTRINSICK. adj. [extrinsecus, Latin.] Outward; external.

When they cannot shake the main fort, they must try if they can possess themselves of the outworks, raise some prejudice against his carriage and his most extrinsecal adherents.

Extrinsic modes are such as arise from something that is not in the subject or substance itself; but it is a manner of being which some substances attain, by reason of something that is external or foreign to the subject; as, this globe lies within two yards of the wall; this man is beloved or hated.

To EXTRACT. v. a. [extrahere, Latin.] To build; to raise; to form into a structure.

EXTRACTOR. n. f. [from extrahere.] A builder; a fabricator; a contriver.

EXTRUDE. v. a. [extrudere, Latin.] To thrust off; to drive off; to push out with violence.

If in any part of the continent they found the shells, they concluded that the sea had been extruded and driven off by the mud.

No. LI.

EXTRUSION. n. f. [extrusio, Latin.] The act of thrusting or driving out.

They suppose the channel of the sea to have been formed, and mountains and carrens, by a violent depression of some parts of the earth, and an extrusion and elevation of others.

EXTRUSANCE. n. f. [extrusio, Latin.] Knobs, or parts protuberant; parts that rise from the rest of the body.

The goug takes off the irregularities or extrusances that lie farthest from the axis of the work.

EXTRUSANCE. n. f. [extrusio, Latin.] Overgrowth; superfluous shoots; useless abundance; luxuriance.

Men esteem the overflowing of gall the extrusance of zeal, and all the promises of the faithful combatant they confidently appropriate.

Though he expatiates on the same thoughts in different words, yet in his smiles that extrusance is avoided.

EXTRUSANCE. n. f. [extrusio, Latin.] 1. Growing with superfluous shoots; overabundant; superfluously plentiful; luxuriant.

Another flora there of bolder hues, And richer sweets, beyond our gardens pride, Plays o'er the fields, and showers with sudden hand Extrusant spring.

His smiles have been thought too extrusant, and full of circumstances.

2. Abounding in the utmost degree.

We might there discern such immense power, such unsearchable wisdom, and such extrusant goodness, as may justly ravish us to an amazement, rather than a bare admiration.

A part of that extrusant devotion, which which the whole assembly raised and animated one another, catches a reader at the greatest distance of time.

EXTRUSANTLY. adv. [from extrusant.] Abundantly; to a superfluous degree.

A considerable quantity of the vegetable matter lay at the surface of the antediluvian earth, and rendered it extrusant fruitful.

To EXTRUSATE. v. n. [extrusare, Latin.] To abound in the highest degree.

All the loveliness imparted to the creature is lent it, to give us enlarged conceptions of that vast confluence and immensity that extrusate in God.

EXTRUSOUS. adj. [extrusivus, Latin.] Without juice; dry.

This is to be effected not only in the plant yet growing, but in that which is brought extrusous and dry unto us.

EXUDATION. n. f. [from exudo, Latin.] 1. The act of emitting in sweat; the act of emitting moisture through the pores.

The tumour sometimes arises by a general exudation out of the cutis.

2. The matter issuing out by sweat from any body.

The gum of trees, which we see shining and clear, is but a fine passage or straining of the juice of the tree through the wood and bark; and in like manner Cornish diamonds, and rock rubies, which are yet more resplendent than gums, are the fine exudations of stone.

If it hath more dew at noon than in the morning, then it seemeth to be an exudation of the herb itself.

Cuckowpittles, or wood-suckers, that spongy frothy dew, or exudation, or both, is found especially about the joints of lavender and rosemary.

To EXUDE. v. n. [exudo, Latin.] To sweat out; to issue out by sweat.

Some perforations in the part itself, through which the humour included doth exude, may be observed in such as are fresh.

The juices of the flowers are, first, the expelled juice; secondly, a volatile oil, wherein the smell of the plant resides; thirdly, honey, exuding from all flowers, the bitter not excepted.

To EXULCERATE. v. a. [exulcerare, Latin.] 1. To make sore with an ulcer; to afflict with a running or eating sore.

Cantharides, applied to any part of the body, touch the bladder and exulcerate it, if they stay on long.

That the saliva hath a virtue of macerating bodies, appears by the effects in taking away warts, sometimes exulcerating the jaws, and roting the teeth.

The stagnating serum turning acrimonious, exulcerates and purifies the bowels, producing most chimal purgations.

2. To afflict; to corrode; to enrage.

Thoughts, my tormentors, arm'd with deadly stings, Mangle my apprehensive tenderest parts, Exasperate, exulcerate, and raise Dire inflammation, which no cooling herb Or medicinal liquor can allay.

EXULCERATION. n. f. [from exulcerare.] 1. The beginning erosion, which wears away the substance and forms an ulcer.

2. EXACERBATION.

2. Exacerbation; corrosion.

This exacerbation of mind made him apt to take all occasions of contradiction. Hosier.
EXULCERATORY. adj. [from exulcerare.] Having a tendency to cause ulcers.

EXULT. v. n. [exulto, Latin.] To rejoice above measure; to triumph; to be in high exaltation of gladness.
 The whole world did seem to exult that it had occasion of pouring out gifts to so blest a purpose. Hosier.

Who might be your mother,
 That you insult, exult, and rail, at once
 Over the wretched? Shakespeare.

EXULTANCE. n. f. [from exult.] Transport; joy; triumph; gladness; exultation.

We have great cause of exultance and joy, God's service being the most perfect freedom. Government of the Tongue.

EXULTATION. n. f. [exultatio, Latin.] Joy; triumph; rapturous delight.

Good effects may grow in each of the people towards others, in them all towards their pastor, and in their pastor towards every of them; between whom there daily and interchangeably pass, in the hearing of God himself, and in the presence of his holy angels, so many heavenly acclamations, exultations, provocations, petitions. Hosier.

Devotion inspires men with sentiments of religious gratitude, and swells their hearts with inward transports of joy and exultation. Addison.

EXUNDATE. v. n. [exundo, Lat.] To overflow; abundance.

EXUNDATION. n. f. [from exundate.] Overflow; abundance.
 It is more worthy the Deity to attribute the creation of the world to the exundation and overflowing of his transcendent and infinite goodness. Ray.

EXUPERABLE. adv. [exuperabili, Latin.] Conquerable; superable; vincible.

EXUPERANCE. n. f. [exuperantia, Lat.] Overbalance; greater proportion.

Rome hath less variation than London; for on the West side of Rome are seated France, Spain and Germany, which take off the exuperance, and balance the vigour of the Eastern parts. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EXUSCITATE. v. a. [exuscito, Latin.] To stir up; to rouse.

EXUSTION. n. f. [exustio, Latin.] The act of burning up; consumption by fire.

EXUVIÆ. n. f. [Latin.] Cast skins; cast shells; whatever is thrown off, or shed by animals.

The fishes upon this stone have taken up so little room in the stone, that they appear to be only the skins or exuvie, rather than entire bodies of fishes. Wardour.

EX. May either come from ex, an island, by neglecting the EA; Saxon g into y, which is usually done; or from the EE; Saxon ea, which signifies a water, river, &c. or, lastly, from ex, a field, by the same kind of neglect. Gibson.

For Guyon's looks; but scornful eyelance at him shot. Sp.

23. EYEGLASS. n. f. [from eye and glass.] Spectacles; glass to assist sight.

Ha' not you seen, Camillo?

But that's past doubt you have; or your eyeglass

Is thicker than a cuckold's horn. Shakespeare.

By comparing it with a good perspective of four foot in length, made with a concave eyeglass, I could read at a greater distance with my own instrument than with the glass. Newton.

24. EY-LESS. adj. [from eye.] Without eyes; sightless; deprived of sight.

A proclaim'd prize! most happy!

That eyefish head of thine was first fram'd of flesh

To raise my tortures. Shakespeare.

Promise was, that I

Should Israel from Philistian yoke deliver;

Ask for this great deliverer now, and find him

Eyefish in Gaza, at the mill with slaves:

Himself is bound under Philistian yoke. Milton.

Pentheus durst deride

The cheated people, and the eyefish guide. Addison.

Eyefish he grop'd about with venereal haste,

And jullied promontories as he paid. Garth.

I have preferred many a young man from her eyeshot by this means. Scitator.

31. EYESIGHT. n. f. [eye and sight.] Sight of the eye.

The Lord hath recompens'd me according to my cleanness in his eyesight. 2 Samuel.

I have an ill-divining foul:

Methinks I see thee, now thou art below,

As one dead in the bottom of a tomb;

Either my eyesight fails, or thou look'st pale: Shakespeare.

I love you, fir,

Dearer than eyesight, space and liberty,

Beyond what can be valued, rich or rare. Shakespeare.

'Tough sight be lost,

Life yet hath many felicity, enjoy'd

Were other senses want not their delights,

At home in lustre and domestic ease,

Exempt from many a care and chance, to which Eyefight exposes daily men abroad. Milton.

Josephus sets this down from his own eyesight, being himself a chief captain at the siege of Jotapata, where these events happened. Wilkins.

He blinds the wife, gives eyesight to the blind,

And molds and stamps anew the lover's mind. Dryden.

32. EYESORE. n. f. [eye and sore.] Something offensive to the sight.

Hath the church of Christ, from the first beginning, by a secret universal instinct of God's good spirit, always used itself

to end neither sermon, nor almost any speech of moment, which hath concerned matters of God, without some special words of honour and glory to the Trinity which we all adore; and is the like conclusion of psalms become now, at length, an eyefore, or a galling to the ears that hear it? Hooker.

Ey, doff this habit; shame to your estate,

And eyefore to our solemn festival. Shakspeare.

As soon as the two lords came thither, they covered, to the trouble of the other; but having presently to speak, they were quickly freed from that eyefore. Clarend.

Mordecai was an eyefore to Haman. L'Estrange.

He's the best piece of man's flesh in the market; not an eyefore in his whole body. Dryden.

Our ey'ry buildeth in the cedars top,

And dallies with the wind, and scorns the sun. Shakspeare.

The eagle, and the stork,

On cliffs and cedar-tops their ey'ry build. Milton.

Some haggard hawk, who had her ey'ry nigh,

Well pounc'd to fasten, and well wing'd to fly. Dryden.

F.

F A B

F, A consonant generally reckoned by authors, and admitted by Sialiger, among the semi-vowels, and according to that opinion distinguished in the enumeration of the alphabet by a name beginning with a vowel, yet has so far the nature of a mute, that it is easily pronounced before a liquid in the same syllable. It has in English an invariable sound, formed by compression of the whole lips and a forcible breath. Its kindred letter is V, which, in the Islandick alphabet, is only distinguished from it by a point in the body of the letter.

FABACEOUS, adj. [fabaceus, Latin.] Having the nature of a bean. Dist.

FABLE, n. f. [fable, French; fabula, Latin.]

1. A feigned story intended to enforce some moral precept.

Jotham's fable of the bees is the oldest extant, and as beautiful as any made since. Addison.

2. A fiction in general.

Triptolemus, so sung the nine,
Strew'd plenty from his cart divine;
But, spite of all those fable makers,
He never fow'd on Almaign acres. Dryden.

3. A vicious or foolish fiction.

But refuse profane and old wives fables. Timothy.

4. The series or contexture of events which constitute a poem epic or dramatick.

The moral is the first business of the poet: this being formed, he contrives such a design or fable as may be most suitable to the moral. Dryden.

The first thing to be considered in an epic poem is the fable, which is perfect or imperfect, according as the action, which it relates, is more or less so. Addison.

5. A lie. This sense is merely familiar.

FABLE, v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feign; to write not truth but fiction.

That Saturn's sons receiv'd the three-fold reign
Of heav'n, of ocean, and deep hell beneath,
Old poets mention, fabling. Prior.

Vain now the tales which fabling poets tell,
That warring conquest fall desires to rove!
In Marlbro's camp the goddess knows to dwell. Prior.

2. To tell falsehoods; to lie.

He fables not: I hear the enemy. Shakespeare.

TO FABBLE, v. a. To feign; to tell of falsity.

To luxury and riot, feast and dance. Milton.

This would produce a new face of things in Europe. Addison.

6. Appearance; resemblance.

Keep still your former face, and mix again

With these lost spirits; run all their mazes with 'em;

For such are treasons. Ben. Johnson.

At the first shock, with blood and powder stain'd,

Nor heav'n, nor sea, their former face retain'd;

Fury and art produce effects so strange,

They trouble nature, and her visage change. Waller.

His dialogue has so much the face of probability, that some have mistaken it for a real conference. Baker.

7. Preference; sight.

Ye shall give her unto Eleazar, and one shall lay her before his face. Numbers.

Jove cannot fear; then tell me to my face,

That I of all the gods am least in grace. Dryden.

8. Confidence; boldness.

Thinking, by this face,

To fasten in our thoughts that they have courage;

But 'tis not so. Shakespeare.

How many things are there which a man cannot, with any face or comeliness, say or do himself? A man can scarce allege his own merits with modesty, much less extol them:

a man cannot sometimes brook to supplicate or beg. Bacon's Essay.

You'll find the thing will not be done

With ignorance and face alone. Hudibras.

You, says the judge to the wolf, h've the face to challenge

th't

that which you never lost; and you, says he to the fox, have the confidence to deny that which you have certainly stolen.

L'Estrange's Fables.
Tillotson.

This is the man that has the face to charge others with false citations.

9. Distortion of the face.

FAC'IT. n. f. [factum, Latin.]

1. A thing done; an effect produced; something not barely supposed or suspected, but really done.

In matter of fact there is some credit to be given to the testimony of man; but not in matter of opinion and judgment: we see the contrary both acknowledged and universally practised also throughout the world. Hobbes.

As men are not to mistake the causes of these operations, so much less are they to mistake the fact or effect, and rashly to take that for done which is not done. Bacon.

Matter of fact breaks out and blazes with too great an evidence to be denied.

2. Reality; not supposition; not speculation.

Thence

Those effects which are wrought by the percussion of the fense, and by things in fall, are produced likewise in some degree by the imagination: therefore if a man see another eat four or acid things, which set the teeth on edge, that object tainteth the imagination. Bacon.

If this were true in fall, I do not see any colour for such a conclusion. Addison.

Manifold fins, though in speculation they may be separable from war, in reality and fall never fail to attend it. Smalridge.

3. Action; deed.

Unhappy man! to break the pious laws
Of nature, pleading in his children's cause:
Howe'er the doubtful fall is underflood,
'Tis love of honour and his country's good;
The consul, not the father, sheds the blood. Dryden.

FACTION. n. f. [factious, French; factie, Latin.]

having some factors doublets at this mart, albeit they did not openly trade. Hayward.

Vile arts and restless endeavours are used by some fly and venomous factors for the old republican cause. South.

All the reason that I could ever hear alleged, by the chief factors for a general intromission of all sorts, sects and persuasions, into our communion, is, that those who separate from us are stiff and obstinate, and will not submit to the rules and orders of our church, and that therefore they ought to be taken away. South.

For'd into exile from his rightful throne,
He made all countries where he came his own;
And viewing monarchs secret arts of sway,
A royal factor for their kingdoms lay. Dryden.

2. [In arithmetic.] The multiplicator and multiplicand. Harris.

FACTORY. n. f. [from factor.]

any thing.

FA'CULTY. n. f. [facultis, French; facultas, Latin.]

1. The power of doing any thing; ability whether corporal or intellectual.

There is no kind of faculty or power in man, or any creature, which can rightly perform the functions allotted to it without perpetual aid and concurrence of that supreme cause of all things. Hosier.

Orators may grieve; for in their sides,
Rather than heads, their faculties abide. Denham.

Reason in man supplies the defect of other faculties wherein we are inferior to beasts, and what we cannot compass by force we bring about by stratagem. L'Erange.

2. Powers of the mind, imagination, reason, memory.

For well I understand in the prime end
Of nature, her the inferior; in the mind
And inward faculties, which most excel. Milton.

In the ordinary way of speaking, the understanding and will are two faculties of the mind. Leke.

Neither did our Saviour think it necessary to explain to us the nature of God, because it would be impossible, without bestowing on us other faculties than we possess at present. Swift.

3. [In physics.] A power or ability to perform any action natural, vital, and animal: by the first they understand that by which the body is nourished and augmented, or another like it generated: the vital faculty is that by which life is preserved, and the ordinary functions of the body performed; and the animal faculty is what conducts the operations of the mind.

Quincy.

4. A knack; habitual excellence; dexterity.

He had none of those faculties, which the other had, of reconciling men to him. Clarendon.

A sober man would have wondered how our author should out monarchial absolute power in that text, had he not had an exceeding good faculty to find it himself where he could not shew it others. Leke.

He had an excellent faculty in preaching, if he were not too refined. Swift.

5. Quality; disposition or habit of good or ill.

I'm traduc'd by tongues which neither know
My faculties nor perforce, yet will be
The chronicles of my doing. Shakespeare.

To woo a maid in way of marriage. Shakespeare.

In difficulties of state, the true reason of failings proceeds from failings in the administration. L'Estrange.

Men who have been busied in the pursuit of the philosophers stone, have fail'd in their design. Addison.

9. To be deficient in duty.

Endeavour to fulfill God's commands, to repent as often as you fail of it, and to hope for pardon and acceptance of him.

Walc.

To FAIL. v. a.

1. To defect; not to continue to assist or supply.

The ship was now left alone, as proud lords be when for-ture *faile*s them. Sider.

So hast thou oft with guile thine honour bent;

But little may such guile thee now avail,

If wonted force and fortune do not much me fail. Spenser.

There shall be signs in the sun, the moon, and the stars, mens hearts *faile*ing them for fear. Lake.

Her heart *faile*d her, and she would fain have compounded for her life. L'Estrange.

He presumes upon his parts that they will not fail him at time of need, and so thinks it superfluous labour to make any provision beforehand. Lake.

2. Not to assist; to neglect; to omit to help.

Since nature *faile*s us in no needful thing,

Why want I means my inward self to see? Devin.

3. To omit; not to perform.

'The inventive god who never *faile*s his part,

Inspires the wit, when once he warms the heart. Dryden.

4. To be wanting to.

There shall not fail thee a man on the throne. 1 Kings.

aanites. Jy. iii. 10.

3. Deficiency; want.

4. Death; extinction.

How grounded he his title to the crown

Upon our fail? Shakespeare.

FA'LING. n. f. [from fail.] Deficiency; imperfection; fault; not atrocious; lapse.

Besides what failings may be in the matter, even in the expressions there must often be great obscurities. Digby.

To failings mild, but zealous for desert;

The clearest head, and the sincerest heart. Pope.

Even good men have many temptations to subdue, many conflicts with those enemies which war against the soul, and many failings and lapses to lament and recover. Rogers.

FA'LLURE. n. f. [from fail.]

1. Deficiency; cessation.

There must have been an universal failure and want of springs and rivers all the Summer season. Wentworth.

2. Omission; non-performance; slip.

He that, being subject to an apoplexy, used skill to carry his remedy about him; but upon a time shifting his cloaths, and not taking that with him, chanced upon that very day to be surprised with a fit: he owed his death to a mere accident, to a little inadvertency and failure of memory. South.

3. A lapse; a slight fault.

FAIN. adj. [feagan, Saxon.]

1. Glad; merry; cheerful; fond. It is still retained in Scotland in this sense.

And in her hand she held a mirror bright,

Whence her face she often viewed fain. Spenser.

My lips will be fain when I sing unto thee, and so will my soul whom thou hast delivered. Psalms.

2. Forced; obliged; compelled. [This signification seems to have arisen from the mistake of the original signification in some ambiguous expressions; as, I was fain to do this, would equally equally suit with the rest of the sentence, whether it was understood to mean I was compelled, or I was glad to do it for fear of worse. Thus the primary meaning seems to have been early lost.]

Every weight to shroud it did constrain,
And this fair couple eke to shroud themselves were fain.
Whoever will hear, he shall find God; whoever will study to know, he shall also fain to believe.
I was fain to forswear it; they would else have married me to the rotten medlar.

When Hildebrand had accursed Henry IV. there were none so hardy as to defend their lord; wherefore he was fain to humble himself before Hildebrand.
The learned Castilio was fain to make trenchers at Balles, to keep himself from starving.
FAIN. adv. [from the adjective.] Gladly; very desirously; according to earnest wishes.

Now I would give a thousand furlongs of sea for an acre of barren ground: I would fain die a dry death.
Why would'st thou urge me to confess a flame I long have stifled, and would fain conceal.
Fain would I Raphael's godlike art rehearse;
And show th' immortal labours in my verse.
The plebeians would fain have a law enacted to lay all mens right and privileges upon the same level.

FAIN. v. n. [from the noun.] To wish; to desire fondly.
Fairer than fairest, in his faining eye,
Whose sole aspect he counts felicity.
FAINT. v. n. [fanes, French.]

They should resolve the next day as victorious conquerors to take the city, or to be there, as fainthearted cowards, to end their days.

FAINT. v. n. [fanes, French.] To wish; to desire fondly.

Now the late fainthearted rout,
O'erthrown and scatter'd round about,
Chac'd by the horror of their fear,
From bloody fray of knight and bear,
Took heart again and fac'd about,
As if they meant to stand it out.

Villains, stand off! bafe, growling, worthless wretches,
Mongrils in faction; poor fainthearted traitors.
FAINTHEARTEDLY. adv. [from fainthearted.] Timorously; in a cowardly manner.

FAINTHEARTEDNESS. n. f. [from fainthearted.] Cowardice; timorousness; want of courage.

Faintly besiege us one hour in a month.

6. Timorously; with dejection; without spirit.
Loth was the ape, though praised, to adventure;
Yet faintly 'gan into his work to enter.

So much his love was dearer than his life.

FAINTNESS. n. f. [from faint.]

1. Languor; feebleness; want of strength.
If the prince of the lights of heaven, which now as a giant doth run his unwearied course, should through a languishing faintness begin to stand.

This proceeded not from any violence of pain, but from a general languishing and faintness of spirits, which made him think nothing worth the trouble of one careful thought.

2. Inactivity; want of vigour.
This evil proceeds rather of the unfoundness of the counsels laid for the reformation, or of faintness in following and effecting the same, than of any such fatal course appointed of God.

3. Timorousness; dejection.
The paleness of this flow'r
Bewray'd the faintness of my master's heart.

FAINTY. adj. [from faint.] Weak; feeble; languid; debilitated; enfeebled.

When winter frosts constrain the field with cold,
The fainty root can take no steady hold.

The ladies gasp'd, and scarcely could respire;
The breath they drew, no longer air, but fire:

The fainty knights were corch'd, and knew not where
To run for shelter; for no shade was near.

FAIR. adj. [færen, Saxon; fær, Danish.]

1. Beautiful; elegant of feature; handsome. Fair seems in the common acceptance to be restrained, when applied to women, to the beauty of the face.

Thou art a fair woman to look up'n.

A funny look of his will soon repair.

2. Not black; not brown; white in the complexion.

I never yet saw man,
But she would spell him backward, if fair fac'd,
She'd swear the gentleman would be her sister;
If black, why, nature, drawing of an antic, Made a foul blot.

Let us look upon men in several climates: the Ethiopians are black, flat-nosed, and crisp-haired; the Moors tawny; the northern people large, and fair complexioned.

part is very wickedness. Psal. lix.

The hand that knits together and supports all compacts, is truth and faïthfulness. South.

2. Adherence to duty; loyalty.

The same zeal a faïthfulness continues in your blood, which animated one of your noble ancestors to sacrifice his life in the quarrel of his sovereign. Dryden.

FA'ITHLESS. adj. [from faïth.]

1. Without belief in the revealed truths of religion; uncon-verted.

Whatsoever our hearts be to God and to his truth, believe we, or be as yet faïthless, for our conversion or confirmation, the force of natural reason is great. Hooker.

Never dare mix ourne cross her foot,

Unless the doth it under this execre,

That she is issue to a faïthless Jew. Shakespeare.

2. Perfidious; disloyal; not true to duty, profession, promise, or allegiance.

Both

Fell by our servants, by those men we lov'd most;

A most unnatural and faïthless service. Shakespeare.

A fever or fall may take away my reason. Locke.
Some were hurt with the fall they got by leaping upon the ground. Swift.
4. Death; overthrow; destruction incurred.
Whom I myself struck down. Shakespeare.
Our fathers were given to the sword, and for a spoil, and had a great fall before our enemies. Judith.
I will begin to pray for myself and for them; for I see the fall of us that dwell in the land. 2 E. 3. r.
5. Ruin; dissolution.
Paul's, the late theme of such a muse, whose flight Has bravely reach'd and soar'd above thy height; Now shalt thou stand, though fow'd, or time, or fire, Or zeal more fierce than they, thy fall confire. Denham.
6. Downfall; loss of greatness; declension from eminence; degradation; state of being depopulated from a high station; plunge from happiness or greatness into misery or meanness.
Her memory served as an accuser of her change, and her own handwriting was there to bear testimony against her fall. Sidney.
Perhaps thou talk'st of me, and do'st enquire Of my restraint; why here I live alone; And pitiest this my miserable fall. Daniel.
He, careless now of interest, fame, or fate, Perhaps forgets that Oxford e'er was great; Or deeming meanest what we greatest call, Beholds thee glorious only in thy fall. Pope.
7. Declension of greatness, power, or dominion.
'Till the empire came to be settled in Charles the Great, the fall of the Romans huge dominion concurring with other universal evils, caused those times to be days of much affliction and trouble throughout the world. Hesker.
8. Diminution; decrease of price.
That the improvement of Ireland is the principal cause why our lands in purchase rise not, as naturally they should, with the fall of our interest, appears evidently from the effect the fall of interest hath had upon houses in London. Child.
9. Declination or diminution of sound; cadence; close of music.
That strain again; it had a dying fall: O, it came o'er my ear, like the sweet south That breathes upon a bank of violets, Stealing and giving odours. Shakespeare.
How sweetly did they float upon the wings Of silence, through the empty-vaulted night, At ev'ry fall smoothing the raven down Of darkness till it sm'd! Milton.
10. Declivity; steep descent.
Waters, when beat upon the shore, or strained, as the falls of bridges, or dashed against themselves by winds, give a roaring noise. Bacon.
11. Cataract; cascade; rush of water down a steep place.
There will we sit upon the rocks, And feed the shepherds feed their flocks By shallow rivers, to whose falls Melodious birds sing madrigals. Shakespeare.
A whistling wind, or a melodious noise of birds among the spreading branches, or a pleasing fall of water running violently, these things made them to swoon for fear. Wisd.
Down through the crannies of the living walls The crystal streams descend in murm'ring falls. Dryden.
The swain, in barren deserts, with turpize Sees lilies spring, and sudden verdure rise; And starts, amidst the thrifty wilds, to hear New falls of water murm'ring in his ear. Pope.
Now under hanging mountains, Beside the falls of fountains, He makes his moan; And calls her ghost, For ever, ever, ever lost! Pope.
12. The outlet of a current into any other water.
Before the fall of the Po into the gulph, it receives into its channel the most considerable rivers of Piedmont, Milan, and the rest of Lombardy. Addison.
13. Autumn; the fall of the leaf; the time when the leaves drop from the trees.
What crowds of patients the town-doctor kills, Or how last fall he rais'd the weekly bills. Dryden.
Any thing that falls in great quantities.
Upon a great fall of rain the current carried away a huge heap of apples. L'Estrange.
14. The act of felling or cutting down: as, the fall of timber.

FALLACIOUS. adj. [fallax, Latin; fallacious, French.]
1. Producing mistake; sophistical. It is never used of men, but of writings, propositions, or things.

- They believed and assented to things neither evident nor certain, nor yet so much as probable, but actually false and fallacious; such as were the absurd doctrines and stories of their rabbies. South.
2. Deceitful; mocking; expectation.
Soon as the force of that fallacious fruit, That with exhilarating vapour bland About their spirits had play'd, and inmost pow'rs Made err, was now exhal'd. Milton.
False philosophy inspires Fallacious hope. Milton.
- FALLACIOUSLY. adv. [from fallacius] Sophistically; with purpose to deceive; with unfound reasoning.
We shall so far encourage contradiction, as to promise not to oppose any pen that shall fallaciously retute us. Brown.
We have seen how fallacious the author has stated the cause, by supposing that nothing but unlimited mercy, or unlimited punishment, are the methods that can be made use of. Addison.
- FALLACIOUSNESS. n. f. [from fallacius] Tendency to deceive; inconclusiveness.
- FALLACY. n. f. [fallacia, Latin; fallace, French] Sophism; logical artifice; deceit; deceitful argument; delusory mode of ratiocination.
Most princes make themselves another thing from the people by a fallacy of argument, thinking themselves most kings when the subject is most basely subjected. St. n. y.
Until I know this sure uncertainty, I'll entertain the favour'd fallacy. Shakespeare.
It were a mere fallacy, and mistaking, to ascribe that to the force of imagination upon another body, which is but the force of imagination upon the proper body. Farqu.
All men, who can see an inch before them, may easily detect gross fallacies. Dryden.
- FALLIBILITY. n. f. [from fallibile] Liability to be deceived; uncertainty; possibility of error.
There is a great deal of fallibility in the testimony of men; yet there are some things they may be almost as certain of as that the sun shines, or that five twenties make an hundred. St. n. y.
- FALLIBLE. adj. [fallibilis, Latin] Liable to error; such as may be deceived.
Do not satisfy your resolution with hopes that are fallible: to-morrow you must die. Shakespeare.
He that creates to himself thousands of little hopes uncertain in the promise, fallible in the event, and depending upon a thousand circumstances, shall often fail in his expectations. Taylor.
Our intellectual or rational powers need some assistance, because they are so frail and fallible in the present state. St. n. y.
- FALLING. n. f. [from fallere] Indentings opposed to prominence.
It shows the nose and eyebrows, with the several prominences and fallings in of the features, much more distinctly than any other kind of figure. Addison.
- FALLING ICKNESS. n. f. [fall and iciness] The epilepsy; a disease in which the patient is without any warning deprived at once of his senses, and falls down.
Did Cæsar swoon?—He fell down in the market-place, and foam'd at mouth, and was speechless.—He hath the falling-iciness. Shakespeare.
The dogfisher is good against the falling-iciness. Warton.
- FALLOW. adj. [fallow, Sax.]
1. Pale red, or pale yellow.
How does your fallow greyhound, fit? I heard say, he was out-run at Cotsale. Shakespeare.
The king, who was excessively affected to hunting, had a great desire to make a great park for red as well as fallow deer between Richmond and Hampton-court. Clarendon.
2. Unfowed; left to rest after the years of tillage. [Supposed to be so called from the colour of naked ground.]
The ridges of the fallow field lay traversed, so as the English must cross them in presenting the charge. Hayward.
3. Plowed, but not sowed; plowed as prepared for a second sowing.
Her predecessors, in their course of government, did but sometimes fall to the ground; and so leaving it fallow, it became quickly overgrown with weeds. Hume.
4. Unplowed; uncultivated.
Her fallow leas The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory, Doth root upon. Shakespeare.
5. Unoccupied; neglected.
Shall faints in civil bloodshed wallow Of faints, and let the cause lie fallow. Hudibras.
- FALLOW. n. f. [from the adjective.]
1. Ground plowed in order to be sowed again.
The plowing of fallow is a very great benefit to land. Astomer.
They are the best ploughs to plow up summer fallow with. Astomer.
2. Ground

2. Ground lying at rest.

Within an ancient forest's ample verge,
There stands a lonely but a healthful dwelling,
BUILT for convenience, and the use of life;
Around it fallows, meads, and pastures fair,
A little garden, and a limpid brook
By nature's own contrivance seems dispos'd.

To FOLLOW. v. n. To plow in order to a second plowing.
Begin to plow up fallows: this first fallowing ought to be very fallow.

But the ground ought to be well plowed and fallowed the summer before.

FALLOWNESS. n. f. [from fallow.] Barrenness; an exemption from bearing fruit.

Like one who, in her third widowhood, doth profess
Herself a nun, ty'd to retiredness.

S' affects my muse now a chaste fallowness.

FALSE. adj. [falsus, Latin; faux, faulx, French.]

1. Not morally true; expressing that which is not thought.

Innocence shall make

False accusation bluish, and tyranny

Tremble at patience.

There are false witnesses among men.

2. Not physically true; conceiving that which does not exist.

For how can that be false, which ev'ry tongue

Of ev'ry mortal man affirms for true?

Which truth hath in all ages been so strong,

As, loadstone like, all hearts it ever drew.

A farce is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture:

the persons and action of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false; that is, inconsistent with the manners of mankind.

3. Supposititious; succeededaneous.

Take a vessel, and make a false bottom of coarse canvass:

fill it with earth above the canvass.

4. Deceiving expectation.

The heart of man looks fair to the eye; but when we come to lay any weight upon't, the ground is false under us.

5. Not agreeable to rule, or propriety.

Now, fy upon my false French; by mine honour, in true

English, I love thee, Kate.

6. Not honest; not just.

What thou would'st highly,

That thou would'st holily; would'st not play false,

And yet would'st wrongly win.

The true prince may, for recreation sake, prove a false thief; for the poor abuses of the times want countenance.

Men are spongers, which, to pour out, receive;

Who know false play, rather than lose, deceive.

7. Treacherous; perfidious; traitorous; deceitful; hollow.

I grant him bloody,

Luxurious, avacious, false, deceitful,

Suspect, malicious, smacking of ev'ry sin

That has a name.

False of heart, light of ear, bloody of hand.

A man to whom he had committed the trust of his person,

in making him his chamberlain; this man, no ways disgraced, no ways discontent, no ways put in fear, turns false unto him.

So hast thou cheated Thebes with a wile,

Against thy vow, returning to beguile

Under a borrow'd name; as false to me,

So false thou art to him who fed thee free.

The ladies will make a numerous party against him, for being false to love in forsaking Dido.

8. Counterfeit; hypocritical; not real.

False tears true pity moves: the king commands

To loose his fetters.

9. In all these senses false is the word opposed.

To FALSE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To violate by failure of veracity.

It's not enough that to this lady mild,

Thou fals'd hast thy faith with perjury.

2. To deceive.

Fair seemingly pleasure each to other makes,

With goodly purposes there as they fit;

And in his fals'd fancy he her takes

To be the fairest wight that lived yet.

3. To defeat; to balk; to thwart; to evade, as fencers commonly do.

But Guyon, in the heat of all his strife,

Was wary wife, and closely did rage

Advantage, whilst his foe did wait most ripe;

Sometimes adhart, sometimes he strook him trait,

And fals'd oft his blows t' illude him with such bait.

4. This word is now out of use.

FALSEHEARTED. adj. [false and heart.]

1. Treacherous; perfidious; deceitful; hollow.

The traitorous or treacherous, who have misled others, are severely punished; and the neutrals and falsehearted friends and followers, who have started aside like a broken bow, be noted.

FA'LSHOOD. n. f. [from false.]

1. Want of truth; want of veracity.

All deception in the course of life, is, indeed, nothing else but a lie reduced to practice, and falsehood passing from words to things.

2. Want of honesty; treachery; deceitfulness; perfidy.

3. A lie; a false assertion.

FA'LSELY. adv. [from false.]

1. Contrarily to truth; not truly.

Simone and Levi spake not only falsely but infidously, nay hypocritically, abusing prophets and religion.

Already were the Helians on our coast,

Whose fleet more mighty every day became

By late success, which they did falsely boast,

And now by first appearing seem'd to claim.

Tell him, I did in vain his brother move,

And yet he falsely said he was in love;

Falsely; for had he truly lov'd, at least

He would have giv'n one day to my request.

Such as are treated ill, and upbraided falsely, find out an intimate friend that will hear their complaints, and endeavour to soothe their secret resentments.

2. Erroneously; by mistake.

He knows that to be inconvenient which we falsely think convenient for us.

3. Perfidiously; treacherously; deceitfully.

FA'LSENESS. n. f. [from false.]

1. Contrariety to truth.

2. Want of veracity; violation of promise.

Suppose the reverse of virtue were solemnly enacted, and the practice of fraud and rapine, and perjury and falseness

to a man's word, and all vice were established by a law, would that which we now call vice gain the reputation of virtue, and that which we now call virtue grow odious to human nature?

3. Duplicity; deceit; double dealing.

Piety is opposed to hypocrisy and insincerity, and all falseness or foulness of intentions, especially to perfonated devotion.

4. Treachery; perfidy; traitorousness.

King Richard might create a perfect guest,

That great Northumberland, then false to him,

Would of that seed grow to a greater falseness.

The prince is in no danger of being betrayed by the false- ness, or cheated by the avarice of such a servant.

FA'LSER. n. f. [from false.] A deceiver; an hypocrite. Now obsolete.

Such end had the kid; for he would weaned be

Of craft coloured with simplicity;

And such end, pardie, does all them remain,

That of such false friendship been fain.

FALSIFI'ABLE. adj. [from false.] Liable to be counterfeited or corrupted.

FALSIFICATION. n. f. [falsification, French; from false.]

1. The act of counterfeiting any thing so as to make it appear what it is not.

Concerning the word of God, whether it be by misconstruction of the sense, or by falsification of the words, witting-ly to endeavour that any thing may seem divine which it is not,

is very plainly to abuse, and even to falseify divine evidence, which injury, offered but unto men, is most worthily counted heinous.

To counterfeit the dead image of a king in his coin is an high offence; but to counterfeit the living image of a king in his person, exceedeth all falsifications; except it should be that of a Mahomet, that counterfeits divine honour.

2. Confutation.

The poet invents this fiction to prevent posterity from searching after this life, and to preserve his story from detection of falsification.

FA'LSIFIER. n. f. [from false.]

1. One that counterfeits; one that makes any thing to seem what it is not.

It happens in theories built on too obvious or too few experiments, what happens to falseifiers of coin; for counterfeit money will endure some one proof, others another, but none of them all proofs.

2. A liar; one that contrives falsehoods.

Boasters are naturally falseifiers, and the people, of all others, that put their thumbs the worst together.

To FA'LSIFY. v. a. [falsefy, French.]

1. To counterfeit; to forge; to produce something for that which in reality it is not.

We cannot excuse it at church which, either through corrupt translations of scripture, delivereth, instead of divine speeches, any thing repugnant unto that which God speaketh; or, through falsefy additions, propoeth that to the people of God as scripture which is in truth no scripture.

The Irish bards use to forge and falsefy every thing they lift, to please or displease any man.

2. To confute; to prove false.

Our Saviour's prophecy stands good in the destruction of the temple, and the dissolution of the Jewish economy, when Jews and Pagans united all their endeavours, under Julian the apostate, to baffle and falsify the prediction. Addison.

3. To violate; to break by falshood.

It shall be thy work, thy shameful work, which is in thy power to shun, to make him live to see thy faith falsified, and his bed defiled. Sidney.

He suddenly falsified his faith, and villainously slew Scymes the king, as he was bathing himself, mistrusting nothing less than the falshood of the pyrate. Kneller.

This superadd treachery to all the other pestilent ingredients of the crime; 'tis the falsifying the most important truth. Deacy of Pity.

4. To pierce; to run through.

His crest is rans'd away, his ample shield Is falsify'd, and round with jav'lin's fill'd. Dryden.

Of this word Mr. Dryden writes thus. My friends quarrelled at the word falsified, as an innovation in our language. The fact is confuted; for I remember not to have read it in any English author; though perhaps it may be found in Spenser's Fairy Queen. But suppose it be not there: why am I forbidden to borrow from the Italian, a polished language, the word which is wanting in my native tongue? Horace has given us a rule for coining words, si græco fonte cadunt, especially when other words are joined with them which explain the sense. I use the word falsify, in this place, to mean that the shield of Turnus was not of proof against the spears and javelins of the Trojans, which had pierced it through and through in many places. The words which accompany this new one, make my meaning plain:

At si iugiter d' Ausi era perfetto, Cui non poter labalo in nesciam ante. Ariosto, cant. xxvi. Falsify cannot otherwise be turned than by falsified; for his shield was falsified, is not English. I might indeed have contented myself with saying his shield was pierced, and bored, and stuck with javelins. Dryden.

Dryden, with all this effort, was not able to naturalise the new signification, which I have never seen copied, except once by some obscure nameless writer, and which indeed deserves not to be received.

- To FALSIFY, v. n. To tell lies; to violate truth.

This point have we gained, that it is absolutely and universally unlawful to lie and falsify. South.

FALSIFY, n. f. [falsitas, Latin.]

1. Falshood; contrariety to truth.

Neither are they able to break through those errors, wherein they are so determinately settled, that they pay unto falsify the whole sum of whatsoever love is owing unto God's truth. Hosker.

Can you on him such falsities obtrude?

And as a mortal the most wife delude? Sandys. Probability does not properly make any alteration, either in the truth or falsity of things; but only imports a different degree of their clearness or appearance to the understanding. South's Sermons.

2. A lie; an error; a false assertion or position.

That Danubius ariseth from the Pyrenean hills, that the earth is higher towards the North, are opinions truly charged on Aristotle by the restorer of Epicurus, and all easily confutable falsities. Glæver.

To FALTER, v. n. [falter, to be wanting, Spanish; vaultur, a flammer, Italian; which is probably a word from the same radical.]

1. To hesitate in the utterance of words.

With faltering tongue, and trembling ev'ry vein, Tell on, quoth she. Spenser.

The pale assistants on each other star'd, With gaping mouths for issuing wounds prepar'd; The still born sounds upon the palate hung, And dy'd imperfect on the faltering tongue. Dryd.

He changes, goals I and falter at the question: His fears, his words, his looks declare him guilty. Smith.

2. To fail in any act of the body.

This earth shall have a feeling; and these stones Prove armed soldiers, ere her native king Shall falter under foul rebellious arms. Shakespeare.

3. To fail in any act of the understanding.

How far ideots are concerned in the want or weakness of any or all faculties, an exact observation of their several ways of faltering would discover. Locke.

To FALTER, v. a. To sit; to cleanse. This word seems to be merely rustick or provincial.

Barley for malt must be bold, dry, sweet, and clean faltered from foulness, feeds and oats. Mortimer.

FALTERINGLY, adv. [falter,] With hesitation; with difficulty; with feebleness.

To FAMBLE, v. a. [fandler, Danish.] To hesitate in the speech. This word I find only in Skinner.

FAME, n. f. [fama, Latin; Φαμα, Doric.]

1. Celebrity; renown.

No LIII.

The house to be builded for the Lord must be exceeding magnificent, of fame and of glory throughout all countries. 1 Chron.

The desire of fame will not suffer endowments to be useless. Addison.

What is this fame, for which we thoughts employ, The owner's wife, which other men enjoy? Pope.

Report; rumour. Pope.

We have heard the fame of him, and all that he did in Egypt. Isa. ix. 9.

I shall shew what are true fames. Bacon.

FAM'ED, adj. [from fame.] Renowned; celebrated; much talked of.

He is fam'd for mildness, peace and prayer. Shakspeare.

He purposes to seek the Clarian god, Avoiding Delphos, his more fam'd abode, Since Phlegyan robbers made unsafe the road. Dryd.

Aristides was an Athenian philosopher, famed for his learning and wisdom; but converted to Christianity. Addison.

FAM'LESS, adj. [from fame.] Without fame; without renown.

Then let me, fameless, love the fields and woods, The fruitful water'd vales and running floods. Mary.

FAM'LIAR, adj. [familiaris, Latin.]

1. Domestick; relating to a family: They range familiar to the dome. Pope.

2. Affable; not formal; easy in conversation. Be thou familiar, but by no means vulgar. Shakspeare.

Be not too familiar with Poins; for he misuses thy favours so much, that he swears thou art to marry his sister Nell. Shak.

3. Unceremonious; free, as among persons long acquainted. Kalandar straight thought he saw his niece Parthenia, and was about in such familiar sort to have spoken unto her; but she, in grave and honourable manner, gave him to understand that he was mistaken. Sidney.

4. Well known; brought into knowledge by frequent practice or custom. I see not how the Scripture could be possibly made familiar unto all, unless far more should be read in the people's hearing than by a sermon can be opened. Hosker.

Let us chuse such limbs of noble counsel, That the great body of our state may go In equal rank with the best govern'd nation; That war, or peace, or both at once, may be As things acquainted and familiar to us. Shakspeare.

One idea which is familiar to the mind, connected with others which are new and strange, will bring those new ideas into easy remembrance. Hosker.

Let us chuse such limbs of noble counsel, That the great body of our state may go In equal rank with the best govern'd nation; That war, or peace, or both at once, may be As things acquainted and familiar to us. Shakspeare.

To FAMILIARIZE. v. a. [familiariser, French.]

1. To make familiar; to make easy by habitude.
 2. To bring down to a state of distant superiority.
- The genius smiled upon me with a look of compassion and affability that familiarized him to my imagination, and at once dispelled all fear and apprehensions. Addison.

FAMILIARLY. adv. [from familiar.]

1. Unceremoniously; with freedom like that of long acquaintance.

Because that I familiarly sometimes

Do use you for my fool, and chat with you,
Your faineness will jell upon my love. Shakespeare.
He talks as familiarly of John of Gaunt as if he had been sworn brother to him; and I'll be sworn he never saw him but once in the Tiltyard, and then he broke his head. Shakespeare.
The governor came to us, and after salutations, said fami- liarly, that he was come to visit us, and called for a chair and sat him down. Bacon.

2. Commonly; frequently; with the unconcernedness or calmness of long habitude or acquaintance.
- Lesser mists and fogs than those which covered Greece with so long darkness, do familiarly present our senses with as great alterations in the sun and moon. Raleigh.

3. Easily; without solemnity; without formality.
- Horace still charms with graceful negligence,
And without method talks us into sense;
Will, like a friend, familiarly convey
The truest notions in the easiest way. Pope.

FAMILLE. en famille, French. In a family way; domestically.

Deluded mortals, whom the great
Chafe for companions en tête à tête;
Who at their dinners, en famille,
Get leave to sit where'er you will. Swift.

FA'MILY. n. f. [familia, Latin; famille, French.]

1. Those who live in the same house; household.
- The night made little impression on myself; but I cannot answer for my whole family; for my wife prevailed on me to take somewhat. Swift.
2. Those that descend from one common progenitor; a race; a tribe; a generation.
 3. A class; a tribe; a species.

There be two great families of things, sulphureous and mercurial, inflammable and not inflammable, mature and crude, oily and watry. Bacon.

FA'MINE. n. f. [famini, French; famini, Latin.] Scarcity of food; dearth; distress for want of victuals.

Our cattle's strength
Will laugh a siege to scorn: here let them lie,
Till famine and the ague eat them up. Shakespeare.
Famines have not been of late observed, partly because of the industry of mankind, partly by those supplies that come by sea to countries in want, but principally by the goodness of God. Hale.

This city never felt a siege before,
But from the lake receiv'd its daily store;
Which now shut up, and millions crowded here,
Famine will soon in multitudes appear. Dryden.

To FA'MISH. v. a. [from fames, Latin; famine, old French.]

1. To kill with hunger; to starve; to destroy by want of food.
- What, did he marry me to famine me? Shakespeare.
The pains of famish'd Tantalus he'll feel,
And Sisyphus, that labours up the hill
The rowling rock in vain; and curst Ixion's wheel. Dryden.
- 2. To kill by deprivation or denial of any thing necessary to life.

Thin air
Above the clouds will pine his entrails grofs,
And famish him of breath, if not of bread. Milton.

To FAMISH. v. n. To die of hunger.

You are all resolv'd rather to die than to famish. Shakespeare.

FA'MISHMENT. n. f. [from famish.] The pain of hunger;
want of food.

Apicius, thou did'st on thy gut bestow
Full ninety millions; yet, when this was spent,
Ten millions still remain'd to thee; which thou,
Fearing to suffer thirst and famishment,
In poison'd potion drank't. Hakewill.

FAMOUSLY. n. f. [from famulus.] Renown; celebrity. Ditt.

FA'MOUS. adj. [fameus, French; famulus, Latin.]

1. Renowned; celebrated; much talked of and praised.

Henry the fifth, too famous to live long;
England ne'er lost a king of so much worth. Shakespeare.
There rose up before Moses two hundred and fifty princes of the assembly, famous in the congregation, men of renown.

Num. xvi. 2.
She became famous among women; for they had executed judgment upon her. Ezek. xxiii. 10.

Pyreus was only famous for counterfeiting all base things;
as earthen pitchers, a scullery, rogues together by the ears,
and swine tumbling in the mire; whereupon he was firnamed Rupographus. Peacham.

I shall be nam'd among the famous

Of women, sung at solemn festivals. Milton.

Many, besides myself, have heard our famous Walter that he derived the harmony of his numbers from the Goshawk of Buloigne, which was turned into English by Mr. Fairfax. Dryden.

2. It has sometimes a middle signification, and imports fame whether for good or ill.

Mencrates and Menas, famous pyrates,

Make the sea serve them. Shakespeare.

FA'MOUSLY. adv. [from famulus.] With great renown; with great celebration.

Then this land was famously enriched
With politic grave counsell; then the king
Had virtuous uncles to protect his grace.

They looked on the particulars as things famously spoken of,
and believed, and worthy to be recorded and read. Grew.

FA'MOUSNESS. n. f. [from famulus.] Celebrity; great fame.

FAN. n. f. [annus, Latin.]

1. An instrument used by ladies to move the air and cool themselves.

With scarfs, and fans, and double change of laces,
With amber bracelets, beads, with all this knavery. Shakespeare.

Flavia, the least and lightest toy

Can with resistless art employ:

In other hands the fan would prove

An engine of small force in love;

But she, with such an air and mien,

Not to be told or safely seen,

Directs its wanton motions so,

That it wounds more than Cupid's bow;

Gives coolness to the matchless dame;

To every other breath a foe. Shakespeare.

The modest fan was lifted up no more,

And virgins smil'd at what they blush'd before. Pope.

2. Any thing spread out like a woman's fan into a triangle with a broad base.

As a peacock and crane were in company, the peacock spread his tail, and challenged the other to show him such a fan of feathers. L'Estrange.

3. The instrument by which the chaff is blown away when corn is winnowed. [Fan, French.]

Flails, strawforks, and rake, with a fan that is strong. Tass.

Asses shall eat clean provender, winnowed with the flail and with the fan. Isaiah.

In the wind and tempest of fortune's frown,

Distinction, with a broad and powerful fan,

Puffing at all, winnows the light away. Shakespeare.

For the cleansing of corn is commonly used either a straw- fan, or a fan with sails. Milton.

4. Any thing by which the air is moved; wings.

The prisoner with a spring from prison broke;

Then stretch'd his feather'd fan with all his might,

And to the neighbouring male wing'd his flight. Dryden.

5. An instrument to raise the fire.

Nature worketh in us all a love to our own comforts: the contradiction of others is a fan to inflame that love. Howe.

To FAN. v. a.

1. To cool or recreate with a fan.

She was fanned into slumbers by her slaves. Spenser.

2. To ventilate; to affect by air put in motion.

Let every scible humour shake your hearts;

Your enemies, with nodding of their plumes,

Fan you into despair. Shakespeare.

The Norwegian banners flout the sky,
And fan our people cold. Shakespeare.

The air

Floats as they pass, fann'd with unnumber'd plumes:

From branch to branch the smaller birds with song

Solace'd the woods, and spread their painted wings. Milton.

Till ev'n.

The fanning wind upon her bosom blows;

To meet the fanning wind the bottom rose:

The fanning wind and purring flocks continue her repose. Dryden.

Calm as the breath which fans our eastern groves,

And bright, as when thy eyes first lighted upon loves. Dryden.

And now his shorter beard, and fans her parting hair. Pope.

3. To separate, as by winnowing.

I have collected some few, therein fanning the old, and omitting any. Bacon.

Not to the wicked; but as chaff, which, fann'd,

The wind drives, so the wicked shall not stand. Milton.

In judgment.

FANATICISM. n. f. [from fanatic.] Enthusiasm; religious frenzy.

A church whose doctrines are derived from the clear fountains of the Scriptures, whose polity and discipline are formed upon the most uncorrupted models of antiquity, which has stood unshaken by the most violent assaults of popery on the one hand, and fanaticism on the other; has triumphed over all.

all the arguments of its enemies, and has nothing now to contend with but their flanders and calumnies. Rogers.

FANA'TICK. adj. [fanaticus, Latin; fanatiqu, Fr.] Enthusiastic; struck with a superstitious frenzy.

After their appear'd

A crew, who, under names of old renown,
Osiris, Isis, Orus, and their train,
With monstrous shapes and forceries abus'd

Fanatic Egypt, and her priests, to seek Their wand'ring gods disguis'd in brutish forms. Milton.

FANA'TICK. n. f. [from the adjective.] An enthusiast; a man mad with wild notions of religion.

The double armature of St. Peter is a more destructive engine than the tumultuary weapon snatch'd up by a fanatic. Decay of Piety.

FANCIFUL. adj. [fancy and full.]

1. Imaginative; rather guided by imagination than reason.

Some fanciful men have expected nothing but confusion and ruin from those very means, whereby both that and this is most effectually prevented. Woodward.

2. Directed by the imagination, not the reason; full of wild images.

What treasures did he bury in his sumptuous buildings?
and how foolish and fan'isid were they? Hayward.

It would flow as much singularity to deny this, as it does a fanciful facility to affirm it. Garth.

FANCIFULLY. adv. [from fanciful.] According to the wildness of imagination.

FANCIFULNESS. n. f. [from fanciful.] Addition to the pleasures of imagination; habit of following fancy rather than reason.

Albertus Magnus, with somewhat too much curiosity, was somewhat transported with too much fancifulness towards the influences of the heavenly motions, and astrological calculations. Hale.

FANCY. n. f. [contracted from phantasy; phantasia, Latin; φαντασία.]

1. Imagination; the power by which the mind forms to itself images and representations of things, persons, or scenes of being.

Shakespeare, fancy's sweetest child! Milton.

In the soul

Are many lesser faculties, that serve
Reason as chief: among these fancy next
Her office holds; of all external things,
Which the five watchful senses represent,
She forms imaginations, airy shapes,
Which reason joining, or disjoining, frames
All what we affirm, or what deny, and call
Our knowledge, or opinion. Milton.

Though no evidence affects the fancy so strongly as that of sense, yet there is other evidence, which gives as full satisfaction and as clear a conviction to our reason. Atterbury.

Love is by fancy led about,

From hope to fear, from joy to doubt;

Whom we now a goddess call,

Divinity grac'd in every feature,

Strait's a deform'd, a perjur'd creature;

Love and hate are fancy all. Granville.

2. An opinion bred rather by the imagination than the reason.

Mens private fancies must give place to the higher judgment of that church which is in authority over them. Hooker.

I have always had a fancy, that learning might be made a play and recreation to children. Licke.

3. Taste; idea; conception of things.

The little chapel called the Salutation is very neat, and built with a pretty fancy. Addison on Italy.

4. Image; conception; thought.

How now, my lord, why do you keep alone;

O! forsist fancies your companions making,

Using those thoughts which should indeed have dy'd

With them they think on? Shakespeare's Macbeth.

5. Inclination; liking; fondness.

Tell me where is fancy bred,

Or in the heart, or in the head?

How begot, how nourish'd?

It is engender'd in the eyes,

With gazing fed, and fancy dies

In the cradle where it lies. Shakespeare's Merch. of Venice.

His fancy lay extremely to travelling. L'Estrange.

For you, fair Hermia, look you arm yourself,

To fit your fancies to your father's will;

Or else the law of Athens yields you up

To death, or to a vow of single life. Shakespeare.

A resemblance in humour or opinion, a fancy for the same business or diversion, is oftentimes a ground of affection. Collier of Friendship.

6. Caprice; humour; whim.

True worth shall gain me, that it may be said

Desert, not fancy, once a woman led. Dryden.

The sultan of Egypt kept a good correspondence with the Jacobites towards the head of the Nile, for fear they should take a fancy to turn the course of that river. Arbutnot.

7. Frolic; idle scheme; vagary.

One that was just entering upon a long journey, took up a fancy of putting a trick upon Mercury. L'Estrange.

8. Something that pleases or entertains.

The altering of the scent, colour, or taste of fruit, by infusing, mixing, or cutting into the bark or root of the tree; herb, or flower, any coloured, aromatic, or medicinal substance, are but fancies: the cause is, for that those things have passed their period, and nourish not. Bacon.

London-pride is a pretty fancy, and does well for borders.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

To FANCY. v. n. [from the noun.] To imagine; to believe without being able to prove.

All are not always bound to hate and punish the true enemies of religion, much less any whom they may fancy to be so: all are always obliged to love its true friends, and to pray for its very enemies. Spratt.

If our search has reached no farther than simile and metaphor, we rather fancy than know, and are not yet penetrated into the inside and reality of the thing; but content ourselves with what our imaginations furnish us with. Locke.

To FANCY. v. a.

1. To portray in the mind; to image to himself; to imagine.

But he whose noble genius is allow'd,

Who with stretch'd pinions soars above the crowd;
Who mighty thought can clothe with manly dress,
He whom I fancy, but can ne'er express. Dryden.

2. To like; to be pleased with.

Ninus both admiring her judgment and valour, together with her person and external beauty, fancied her so strongly, as, neglecting all princely respects, he took her from her husband. Raleigh.

It is a little hard that the queen cannot demolish this point in whatever manner she pleases to fancy. Swift.

FANCYMOGNER. n. f. [from fancy.] One who deals in tricks of imagination.

There is a man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hang odes upon hawthorn, and elegies on brambles; all forsooth, deifying the name of Rosalind. If I could meet that fancymonger, I would give him some good counsel; for he seems to have the quotidian of love upon him. Shakespeare.

FANCYSICK. adj. [fancy and sick.] One whose imagination is unbound; one whose dilettence is in his own mind.

'Tis not necessity, but opinion, that makes men miserable; and when we come once to be fancysick, there's no cure for it. L'Estrange.

FANE. n. f. [fane, French; fanum, Latin.] A temple; a place consecrated to religion.

Not fane, nor capitol,

The prayers of priests, nor times of sacrifice,

Embarments all of fury, shall lift up

Their rotten privilege. Shakespeare.

Old Calibe, who kept the sacred fane

Of Juno, now the fecm'd. Dryden.

Yet some to fanes repair'd, and humble rites

Perform'd to Thor and Woden, fabled gods,

Who with their votaries in one ruin shar'd. Philips.

A sacred fane in Egypt's fruitful lands,

Hewn from the Theban mountain's rocky womb. Takell.

The fields are ravish'd from th' industrious swains,

From men their cities, and from gods their fanes. Pope.

Destruction fang mankind!

FANG. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The long tusks of a boar or other animal; any thing like 'em

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,

The scalon's difference; as the icy fang

And churlish chiding of the Winter's wind;

Which, when it bites and blows upon my body,

Ev'n 'till I shrink with cold, I smile and say

This is no flattery. Shakespeare.

Some

Some creatures have overlong or outgrowing teeth, which we call fangs, or tusks; as boars, pikes, falmons; and dogs though less. Bacon.

Prepar'd to fly,

The fatal fang drove deep within his thigh,
And cut the nerves: the nerves no more sustain
The bulk; the bulk, unprop'd, falls headlong on the plain. Dryden.

Then charge him close, provoke him to the rage
Of fangs and claws, and, stooping from your horse, Rivet the panting favage to the ground. Addison.

- The nails; the talons.
- Any shoot or other thing by which bold is taken.

The protuberant fangs of the yuca are to be treated like the tuberoses. Evelyn.
The protuberant fangs of the yuca are to be treated like the tuberoses. Evelyn.

FA'NGED. adj. [from fang.] Furnished with fangs or long teeth; furnished with any instruments of destruction, which can be exercised in imitation of fangs.

My two schoolfellows,
Whom I will trust as I will assure fang'd,
They bear the mandate. Shakespeare.
Not Scythians, nor fierce Dacians, onward rush
With half the speed, nor half so swift retreat:
In chariots, fang'd with scythes, they scour the field,
Drive through our wedg'd battalions with a whirl,
And flrew a dreadful harvest on the plain. Philips.

FAN'GLE. adj. [from feng, Saxon, to attempt. Skinner.] Silly attempt; trifling scheme. It is never used, or rarely, but in the contempt with the epithet new; as, new fangles, new fanglesties.

FAN'GLED. adj. [from fangle.] This word seems to signify gaudy; ridiculously showy; vainly decorated. This is still retained in Scotland; as, he's new fangled, or whimsical, and very fond of novelty.

FANTASY. n. f. [phantasia, Fr. phantasia, Latin; φαντασία, Græc.]

1. Fancy; imagination; the power of imagining. See FANCY.

How now, Horatio! you tremble and look pale!

Is not this something more than fantasy? Shakespeare.

I talk of dreams,

Which are the children of an idle brain,

Begot of nothing but vain fantasy;

Which is as thin of substance as the air,

And more unsound than the wind. Shakespeare.

He is superstitious grown of late,

Quite from the main opinion he held once

Of fantasy, of dreams, and ceremonies. Shakespeare.

Go you, and where you find a maid,

That ere she sleep hath thrice her prayers said,

Rein up the organs of her fantasy;

Sleep be as found as careless infancy. Shakespeare.

These spirits of leaves, in fantasy's high court,

Judge of the forms of objects, ill or well;

And so they send a good or ill report

Down to the heart, where all affections dwell. Devin.

By the power of fantasy we see colours in a dream, or a mad man sees things before him which are not there. Neat.

2. Idea; image of the mind.

And with the fugitive sweet thereof allure,

Chaste ladies ears to fantasies impure. Ben Jonson.

3. Humour; inclination.

I would with that both you and others would cease from drawing the Scriptures to your fantasies and affections. Whit.

FA'NTOM. n. f. [See PHANTOM.]

FAP. adj. Fuddled; drunk. It seems to have been a cant word in the time of Shakespeare.

The gentleman had drunk himself out of his five senses;

and being fap, fir, was, as they say, calvered. Shakespeare.

FAR. adv. [fero, Saxon; fasti, Eric.]

—As far, my lord, as will fill up the time

'Twixt this and supper. Shakespeare.

Far from that hated face the Trojans fly;

All but the fool who fought his destiny. Dryden.

4. Remotely; at a great distance.

He meant to travel into far countries, until his friends' affection ceased or prevailed. Sidney.

In a kingdom rightly ordered, after a law is once published, it presently takes effect far and wide; all states framing themselves thereunto.

And after that long strayed here and there,

Through every field and forest far and near. Spenser.

Far be it from me to justify the cruelties which were at first used towards them, which had their reward soon after.

Bacon's Holy War.

He sent light horsemen into Mesopotamia with a guide, because

cause the country was unto him best known; following not far after himself with all his army. Knelley.

And yet the lights which in my tower do shine,
Mine eyes, which view all objects nigh and far,
Look not into this little world of mine. Davies.

God hath bid dwell far off all anxious cares,
And not molest us; unless we ourselves
Seek them with wand'ring thoughts, and notions vain. Milt.
I have been hunting up and down, far and near, since your unhappy indisposition, to find out a remedy. L'Estrange.

The nations far and near contend in choice,
And send the blow of war by publick voice.
The painted lizard and the birds of prey,
Foes of the frugal kind, be far away. Dryden.

the expressions, that in these epistles one may observe the force of the Hebrew conjugations. La. Ke.

10. It is used often in composition; as farshooting, farfencing.
FAR-FETCH. n. f. [far and fetch.] A deep stratagem. A ludicrous word.

But Jesuits have deeper reaches,
In all their politick farfetched;
And from their Coptic priest, Kircherus,
Found out this mytick way to jeez us. Hudibras.

N° LIII.

FAR-FETCHED. adj. [far and fetch.]

1. Brought from places remote.

Of these things others quickly will dispose,
Whose pains have earn'd the farfetched spoil. Milton.

By his command we boldly cross'd the line,
And bravely fought where southern stars arise:
We trac'd the farfetched gold unto the mine,
And that which brib'd our fathers made our prize. Dryden.

2. Studiously sought; elaborately strained; not easily or naturally introduced.

York, with all his farfetched policy. Shakespeare.
For farfetched rhymes make puzzled angels strain,
And in low prose dull Lucifer complain. Smith.

Under this head we may rank those words, which signify different ideas, by a sort of an unaccountable farfetched analogy, or distant resemblance, that fancy has introduced between one thing and another; as when we say, the meat is green when it is half roasted. Watts.

FAR-PIERCING. adj. [far and pierce.] Striking, or penetrating a great way.

Atlas, her fire, to whose farpiercing eye
The wonders of the deep expanded lie;
Th' eternal columns which on earth he rears,
End in the starry vault, and prop the spheres. Pope.

FAR-SHOOTING. adj. [far and shoot.] Shooting to a great distance.

Then loud he call'd Æneas thrice by name;
The loud repeated voice to glad Æneas came;
Great Jove, he said, and the farshooting god,
Inspire thy mind to make thy challenge good. Dryden.

FAR. adj.
1. Distant; remote.

But we must beg our bread in climes unknown,
Beneath the scorching or the freezing zone;
And some to far Oaxia shall be sold,
Or try the Lybian heat, or Scythian cold. Dryden.

2. It was formerly used not only as an adverb but an adjective, with off.

These things seem small and undistinguishable,
Like far off mountains turned into clouds. Shakespeare.

If we may behold in any creature any one speak of that eternal fire, or any far off dawning of God's glorious brightness, the fame in the beauty, motion, and virtue of this light may be perceived. Raleigh.

3. From FAR. In this sense is used elliptically for far or remote place.

The Lord shall bring a nation against thee from far, from the end of the earth. Deuteronomy.

4. Remoter of the two; in horsemanship, the right side of the horse, which the rider turns from him when he mounts.

No true Egyptian ever knew in horses
The far side from the near. Dryden.

FAR. n. f. [contracted from farrow.] The offspring of a sow;
young pigs.

Sows, ready to farrow this time of the year,
Are fow to be made of and counted full dear;
For now is the loss of the far of the fow
More great than the loss of two calves of the cow. Tuss.

To FARCE. v. a. [farcius, Latin; farce, French.]
1. To stuff; to fill with mingled ingredients.

Wrestling is a pastime which either the Cornishmen derived from Corineus, their first pretended founder, or at least it infused some stuff to the farcing of that fable. Carver.

2. To extend; to swell out.

'Tis not the balm, the sceptre and the ball,
The sword, the mace, the crown imperial,
The enticell'd robe of gold and pearl,
The farced title running 'fore the king. Shakespeare.

FARCE. n. f. (from the verb; or from farcer, French, to mock.)
A dramatick representation written without regularity, and stuffed with wild and ludicrous conceits.

There is yet a lower sort of poetry and painting, which is out of nature; for a farce is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture: the perous and actions of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false; that is, inconsistent with the characters of mankind; grotesque painting is the just resemblance of this. Dryden.

What should be great, you turn to farce.
They object against it as a farce, because the irregularity of the plot should answer to the extravagance of the characters, which they say this piece wants, and therefore is no farce. Gay.

FARICAL. adj. [from farce.] Belonging to a farce; appropriated to a farce.

They deny the characters to be farical, because they are actually in nature. Gay.

FARCY. n. f. [farcina, Italian; farciu, French.] The leprosy of horses. It is probably curable by antimony.

FARDEL. n. f. [faridella, Italian; faracau, Fr.] A bundle; a little pack.

Let us to the king; there is that in this farrel will make him scratch his beard. Shakespeare.

- Who would farde bear,
To groan and sweat under a weary life ?
TO FARE v. n. [farān, Saxon; varēn, Dutch.]
1. To go; to pass; to travel.
At last, resolving forward still to fare,
Until the blustering storm is overblown.
His spirits pure were subject to our fight,
Like to a man in fiew and shape he fares.
So on he fares, and to the border comes
Of Eden.
Sadly they far'd along the sea-beat shore;
Still heav'd their hearts.
2. To be in any state good or bad.
So bids thee well to fare thy nether friend. Fairy Queen.
A stubborn heat shall fare evil at the last.
Well fare the hand, which to our humble fight
Presents that beauty, which the dazzling light
Of royal splendor.
So in this throng bright Sacharissa far'd,
Oppress'd by those who strove to be her guard:
As ships, though never so obsequious, fall
Foul in a tempest on their admiral.
So fares the flag among th' enraged hounds;
Repels their force, and wounds returns for wounds. Drub.
But as a barque, that in foul weather,
To's'd by two adverse winds together,
Is bruise'd and beaten to and fro,
And knows not what to turn him to;
So far'd the knight between two foes,
And knew not which of them 't' oppose.
If you do as I do, you may fare as I fare.
Thus fares the queen, and thus her fury blows
Amidst the crowd.
English ministers never fare so well as in a time of war with a foreign power, which diverts the private feuds and animosities of the nation, and turns their efforts upon the common enemy. Addison.
Some give out there is no danger at all; others are comforted that it will be a common calamity, and they shall fare
no worse than their neighbours. Swift.
3. To proceed in any train of consequences good or bad.
Thus it fares when too much desire of contradiction causeth our speeches rather to pass by number than to stay for weight. Hooker.
So fares it when with truth falsehood contends. Milton.
4. To happen to any one well or ill. With it preceding in an imperfect form.
When the hand finds itself well warmed and covered, let it refuse the trouble of feeding the mouth, or guarding the head,
'till the body be starved or killed, and then we shall see how it will fare with the hand. South.
5. To feed; to eat; to be entertained with food.
The rich man fares sumptuously every day. Luke.
Feast your ears with the music awhile, if they will fare so harshly as on the trumpet's sound. Shakespeare.
Men think they have fares hardly, if, in times of extremity, they have defended so low as dogs; but Galen delivereth, that young, fat, and gelded, they were the food of many nations. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
FARE, n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Price of passage in a vehicle by land or by water. Used only of that which is paid for the person, not the goods.
He found a ship going to Tarlish; so he paid the fare thereof, and went down into it to go with them unto Tarlish. Jon.
He passage begs with unregarded pray'r,
And wants two farthings to discharge his fare. Dryden.
2. Food prepared for the table; provisions.
But come, so well refresh'd, now let us play,
As meet is, after such delicious fare. Milton.
But when the western winds with vital pow'r
Call forth the tender grass and budding flow'r,
'Then, at the last, produce in open air
Both flocks, and send them to their Summer's fare. Dryden.
This is what nature's want may well suffice;
He that would more is covetous, not wise:
But since among mankind so few there are,
Who will conform to philosophick fare,
This much I will indulge thee for thy ease,
And mingle something of our times to please. Dryden.
Upon his rising up he ordered the peasant to set before him whatever food he had in his house: the peasant brought out a great deal of coarse fare, of which the emperor eat very heartily. Addison.
FAREWELL, adv. [This word is originally the imperative of the verb fare well, or fare you well; sis felix, abi in banam rem; or bene sit tibi; but in time use familiarized it to an adverb, and it is used both by those who go and those who are left.]
1. The parting compliment; adieu.
But farewell, king; with this thou wilt appear,
Freedom lives hence, and banishment is here. Shakep.

- Farewell*, master Silence: I will not use many words with you; fare you well, gentlemen, both. Shakespeare.
Whether we shall meet again, I know not,
Therefore our everlasting farewell take;
For ever, and for ever, farewell Callist. Shakespeare.
Be not amazed, call all your senses to you; defend your reputation, or bid farewell to your good life for ever. Shakespeare.
An iron lumber thrusts my swimming eyes;
And now farewell, involv'd in shades of night,
For ever I am ravish'd from thy sight.
Farewell, says he; the parting sound scarce fell
From his faint lips, but the reply'd farewell. Dryden.
O queen, farewell! be full posselt
Of dear remembrance, blessing still and bliss! Dryden.
2. It is sometimes used only as an expression of separation without kindness.
Farewell the year which threaten'd so
The fairest light the world can show.
Treading the path to nobler ends,
A long farewell to love I gave;
Relov'd my country and my friends
All that remain'd of me should have. Waller.
FAREWELL, n. f.
1. Leave; act of departure.
See how the morning opens her golden gates,
And takes her farewell of the glorious sun.
If chance the radiant sun, with farewell sweet,
Extend his evening beam, the fields revive,
The birds their notes renew, and bleating herds
Attend their joy, that hill and valley ring.
As in this grove I took my last farewell,
As on this very spot of earth I fell. Dryden.
Before I take my farewell of this subject, I shall advise the author for the future to speak his meaning more plainly. Addi.
2. It is sometimes used as an adjective; leave taking.
Several ingenious writers, who have taken their leave of the public in farewell papers, will not give over so, but intend to appear again; though perhaps under another form, and with a different title. Dryden.
FAIRINACEOUS, adj. [from farina, Latin.] Mealy; being like meal or flower of corn.
The properest food of the vegetable kingdom for mankind, is taken from the farinaceous or mealy seeds of some culi-verous plants; as oats, barley, wheat, rice, rye, maize, panick, and millet. Boissier.
FARM, n. f. [ferme, French; ferrom, provision, Saxon.]
1. Ground let to a tenant; ground cultivated by another man upon condition of paying part of the profit to the owner or landlord.
Touching their particular complaint for reducing lands and farm to their ancient rents, it could not be done without a parliament. Hayes.
2. The state of lands let out to the culture of tenants.
The lords of land in Ireland do not use to let out their land in farm, for term of years, to their tenants; but only from year to year, and some during pleasure. Speyer.
TO FARM, v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To let out to tenants at a certain rent.
We are enforc'd to farm our royal realm,
The revenue whereof shall furnish us
For our affairs in hand. Shakespeare.
2. To take at a certain rate.
They received of the bankers scant twenty shillings further,
which the earl of Cornwall farmed of the king. Conant.
3. To cultivate land.
FARMER, n. f. [fermier, French; or from farm.]
1. One who cultivates hired ground.
Thou hast seen a farmer's dog bark at a beggar, and the creature run from the cur: there thou might'st behold the great image of authority; a dog's obey'd in office. Swift.
2. One who cultivates ground, whether his own or another's.
Nothing is of greater prejudice to the farmer than the dissolving of his land with cattle that are larger than it will bear. Mortimer's History.
FARMOST, adj. [superlative of far.] Most distant; re-motest.
A spacious cave, within its farmost part,
Was hew'd and fashion'd by laborious art,
Through the hill's hollow sides. Dryden.
FARNES, n. f. [from far.] Distance; remoteness.
Their nearness on all quarters to the enemy, and their nearness from timely succour by their friends, have forced the commanders to call forth the utmost number of able hands to fight. Carr.
FARRAGINOUS, adj. [from farrago, Latin.] Formed of different materials.
Being a confusion of knaves and fools, and a farrago conjunction of all conditions, tempers, sexes and ages, and but natural if their determinations be monstrous, and most ways inconsistent with truth. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
FARRAGO, n. f. [Latin.] A mass formed casually of veral ingredients; a medley. FARRAGO.

FARRIER. n. f. [ferrier, French; ferrarius, Latin.]

1. A shoer of horses.

But the utmost exactness in these particulars belong to farrriers, saddlers, smiths, and other tradesmen. Digby.

2. One who professes the medicine of horses.

If you are a piece of a farrrier, as every good groom ought to be, get sack, brandy, or strong-beer to rub your horses.

Swift's Directions to the Groom.

To FARRIER. v. n. [from the noun.] To practise physick or chirurgery on horses.

Though there are many pretenders to the art of farrriery and cowlceching, yet many of them are very ignorant. Mort.

FARRROW. n. f. [farrh, Saxon.] A little pig.

Pour in fow's blood that hath litter'd

Her nine farrow. Shakespeare.

To FARRROW. v. a. To bring pigs. It is used only of swine.

Sows ready to farrow this time of the year,

Are for to be made of. Tuff.

The swine, although multiparous, yet being bifolucous, and only cloven-hoofed, is farrowed with open eyes, as other bifolucous animals. Brewin.

Ev'n her, who did her numerous offspring boast,

As fair and fruitful as the fow that carry'd

The thirty pigs, at one large litter farrow'd. Dryden.

FART. n. f. [fere, Saxon.] Wind from behind.

Love is the fart

Of every heart;

It pains a man when 'tis kept close;

And others that offend, when 'tis let loose. Suckling.

To FART. v. a. [from the noun.] To break wind behind.

As when we a gun discharge,

Although the bore be ne'er so large,

Before the flame from muzzle burst,

Just at the breech it flashes first;

So from my lord his passion broke,

He farted first, and then he spoke. Swift.

FARTHER. adv. [This word is now generally considered as the comparative degree of far; but by no analogy can far make farther or farthest: it is therefore probable, that the ancient orthography was nearer the true, and that we ought to write further and furthest, from forth, farther, furthest, yon- der, fun, der, Saxon; the o and u, by resemblance of sound, being first confounded in speech, and afterwards in books.]

At a greater distance; to a greater distance; more remotely;

beyond; moreover.

To make a perfect judgment of good pictures, when compared with one another, besides rules, there is farther required

a long conversation with the best pieces. Dryden.

They contented themselves with the opinions, fashions and things of their country, without looking any farther. Locke.

FARTHER. adj. [supposed from far, more, probably from forth.]

1. More remote.

Let me add a farther truth, that without those ties of gratitude, I have a most particular inclination to honour you. Dryden's Juven. Dedication.

2. Longer; tending to greater distance.

Before our farther way the fates allow,

Here must we fix on high the golden bough. Dryden.

FARTHERANCE. n. f. [more properly furthereance, from fur- ther.] Encouragement; promotion.

'That was the foundation of the learning I have, and of all the fartherance that I have obtained. Milham.

FARTHERMORE. adv. [more properly furtharmore.] Besides;

over and above; likewise.

Fartharmore the leaves, boughs and boughs of this tree, by so much exceed all other plants, as the greatest men of power and worldly ability surpass the meanest. Raleigh.

To FARTHER. v. a. [more proper To further.] To promote;

to facilitate; to advance.

If he had farthered or hindered the taking of the town.

Dryden's Dedication to the Æn.

FARTHEST. adv. [more properly furthest. See FARTHER.]

1. At the greatest distance.

2. To the greatest distance.

FARTHEST. adj. Most distant; remotest.

Yet it must be withal considered, that the greatest part of the world are they which be farthest from perfection. Hobbes.

FARTHING. n. f. [fearthing, Saxon, from feor, four, that is, the fourth part of a penny.]

1. The fourth of a penny; the smallest English coin.

A farthing is the least denomination or fraction of money used in England. Cocker.

Else all those things we toil so hard in,

Would not avail one single farthing. Prior.

2. Copper money.

'I he parish find, 'tis true; but our church-wardens

Feed on the silver, and give us the farthings. Gay.

You are not obliged to take money not of gold or silver;

nor the halfpence or farthings of England. Swift.

3. It is used sometimes in a sense hyperbolical: as, it is not worth a farthing; or proverbial.

His son builds on, and never his content,

'Till the last farthing is in structure spent. Dryden.

FARTHINGALE. n. f. [This word has much exercised the etymology of Stimmer, who at last seems to determine that it is derived from vertu garde: if he had considered what vert signifies in Dutch, he might have found out the true sense.] A hoop; circles of whalebone used to spread the petticoat to a wide circumference.

With silken coats, and caps, and golden rings,

With ruffs, and cuffs, and farthingales, and things. Shakespeare.

Tell me,

What compass will you wear you farthingale? Shakespeare.

Arthur wore in hall

Round table, like a farthingale. Hudibras.

Some will have it that it portends the downfall of the French king; and observe, that the farthingale appeared in England

a little before the ruin of the Spanish monarchy. Addison.

She seems a medley of all ages,

With a huge farthingale to swell her fustian stuff,

A new commode, a topknot, and a ruff. Swift.

FARTHINGSWORTH. n. f. [farthing and werb.] As much as is sold for a farthing.

They are thy customers; I hardly ever sell them a farthing- worth of any thing. Arbutnot.

FASCES. n. f. [Latin.] Rods anciently carried before the consuls as a mark of their authority.

The duke beheld, like Scipio, with disdain,

That Carthage, which he ruin'd, rise once more;

And shook aloft the fascies of the main, Dryden.

To fright those slaves with what they felt before.

FASCIA. n. f. [Latin.] A fillet; a bandage.

FASCIATED. adj. [from fascia.] Bound with fillets; tied with a bandage. DiD.

FASCINATION. n. f. [from fascia.] Bandage; the act or manner of binding diseased parts.

Three especial sorts of fascination, or rowling, have the worthies of our profession commended to posterity. Wijman.

To FASCINATION. v. a. [fascine, Latin.] To bewitch; to enchant; to influence in some wicked and secret manner.

'Here be none of the affections which have been noted to fascinate or bewitch, but love and envy. Bacon.

Such a fascinating fin this is, as allows men no liberty of consideration. Dewey of Piety.

FASCINATION. n. f. [from fascinate.] The power or act of bewitching; enchantment; unseen inexplicable influence.

He had such a crafty and bewitching fashion, both to move pity and to induce belief, as was like a kind of fascination and enchantment to those that saw him or heard him. Bacon.

The Turks hang old rags, or such like ugly things, upon their fairest horses, and other goodly creatures, to secure them against fascination. Waller.

There is a certain bewitchery or fascination in words, which makes them operate with a force beyond what we can naturally give an account of. South.

FASCINE. n. f. [French.] A faggot. Military cant.

The black prince passed many a river without the help of pontoons, and filled a ditch with faggots as successfully as the generals of our times do with fascines. Addison.

FASCINOUS. adj. [fascinum, Latin.] Caused or acting by witchcraft, or enchantment.

I shall not discuss the possibility of fascinus diseases, farther than refer to experiment. Harvey.

FASHION. n. f. [fason, French; facies, Latin.]

1. Form; make; state of any thing with regard to its outward appearance.

They pretend themselves grieved at our solemnities in erecting churches, at their form and fashion, at the stateliness of them and collineity, and at the opinion which we have of them. Hobbes.

The fashion of his countenance was altered. Luke.

Stand these poor peoples friend.

—I will,

Or let me lose the fashion of a man. Shakespeare.

2. The make or cut of cloaths.

I'll be at charges for a looking-glass,

And entertain a score or two of taylor's,

To study fashions to adorn my body. Shakespeare.

You, sir, I entertain for one of my hundred; only, I do not like the fashion of your garments. Shakespeare.

3. Manner; or way.

For that I love your daughter

In such a righteous fashion as I do,

Perforce against all checks, rebukes, and manners;

I must advance. Shakespeare.

Pluck Casca by the sleeve,

And he will, after his fashion, tell you

What hath proceeded. Shakespeare.

The commissioners either pulled down or defaced all images in churches; and that in such unseasonable and unchristian fashion, as if it had been done in hostility against them. Hayw.

4. Custom operating upon dress, or any domestic ornaments.

Here's

Here's the note

How much the chain weighs to the utmost ear, at,
The fineness of the gold, the chargeful fashion. Shakespeare.

5. Custom; general practice.
Zelmane again, with great admiration, begun to speak of him; asking whether it were the fashion or no, in Arcadia, that shepherds should perform such valorous enterprises. Sidon.
Though the truth of this hath been universally acknowledged, yet because the fashion of it is to call every thing into question, it will be requisite to satisfy mens reason about it. Tillotson.

Why truly, wife, it was not easily reconciled to the common method; but then it was the fashion to do such things. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

6. Manner imitated from another; way established by precedent.

Sorrow for royalty in you appears,
That I will deeply put the fashion on,
And wear it in my heart. Shakespeare.

7. General approbation; mode.
A young gentleman accommodates himself to the innocent diversions in fashion. Locke.

His pangs tricks were bestowed only on such persons as he had familiarly known, and only at such times as others cease to praise; when out of power, or out of fashion. Pope.

8. Rank; condition above the vulgar. It is used in a sense below that of quality.

It is strange that men of fashion, and gentlemen, should so grossly belie their own knowledge. Raleigh.

9. Any thing worn.
Now, by this maiden blossom in my hand,
I scorn thee; and thy fashion, peevish boy. Shakespeare.

10. The farcy; a distemper in horses; the horses leprosy. A barbarous word.

His horse is possessed with the glanders, infected with the fashions, and full of windgalls. Shakespeare.

- TO FASHION, v. a. [fajsoner, French; from the noun.]

1. To form; to mould; to figure.

He loves me well, and I have giv'n him reasons;
Send him but hither, and I'll fashion him. Shakespeare.

Did not that make me in the womb, make him? and did not one fashion us in the womb? Job.

The graves of the rebellious generations were already fashioned in the clouds, which soon after should swallow up all living creatures. Raleigh.

The rib he form'd, and fashion'd with his hands:
Under his forming hands a creature grew,
Man like, but different sex. Milton.

Inability will every one find in himself, who shall go about to fashion in his understanding any simple idea, not received by his senses from external objects, or by reflection from the operations of his mind about them. Locke.

How could this noble fabric be design'd,
And fashion'd, by a maker brute and blind?
Could it of art look miracles invent?
And raise a beauteous world of such extent? Blackmore.

A different tool another forge employs,
Here the loud hammer fashions female toys;
Each trinket that adorns the modern dame,
Fits to their little artfuls owd its frame. Gay.

2. To fit; to adapt; to accommodate.

Laws ought to be fashioned unto the manners and conditions of the people to whom they are meant, and not to be imposed upon them according to the simple rule of right. Spenser.

Ne do I doubt, but that ye well can fashion
Yourselfes thereto, according to occasion. Spenser.

Nature as it grows again tow'rd earth,
Is fashion'd for the journey, dull and heavy. Shakespeare.

This cardinal,
Though from an humble flock undoubtedly,
Was fashion'd to much honour from his cradle. Shakespeare.

3. To cast into external appearance.

It better fits my blood to be disdain'd of all, than to fashion a carriage to rob love from any. Shakespeare.

4. To make according to the rule prescribed by custom.

The value of the labour employed about one parcel of silver more than another, makes a difference in their price; and thus fashioned plate sells for more than its weight. Locke.

- FA'SHIONABLE, adj. [from fashion.]

1. Approved by custom; established by custom; modish.

The eminence of your condition, and the gallantry of your principles, will invite gentlemen to the useful and ennobling study of nature, and make philosophy fashionable. Glan.

Examine how the fashionable practice of the world can be reconciled to this important doctrine of our religion. Rogers.

'Tis prevailing example that hath now made it fashionable. Bentley.

2. Made according to the mode.

Rich, fashionable robes her person deck;
He darts her ears, and d pearls adorn her neck. Dryden.

3. Obsolete of the mode.

Time is like a fashionable coat,

That slightly shakes his parting guest by th' hand;
But with his arm outstretch'd, as he would fly,
Grasps in the corner: welcome ever smiles,
And farewell goes out sighing. Shakespeare.

4. Having rank above the vulgar, and below nobility.

FA'SHIONABLENESS, n. f. [from fashionable.] Modish elegance; such appearance as is according to the present custom.

Why should they not continue to value themselves for this outside fashionableness of the taylor or tiewoman's making, when their parents have so early instructed them to do so? Locke.

FA'SHIONABLY, adv. [from fashionable.] In a manner conformable to custom; with modish elegance.

He must at length die dully of old age at home, when here he might so fashionably and genteely have been duelled or fluked into another world. Smith.

FA'SHIONIST, n. f. [from fashion.] A follower of the mode; a fop; a coxcomb. Dick.

TO FAST, v. n. [fajst, Gothick; fæstan, Saxon] of making a law unto themselves, than the crime of transgressing a law which God had made. Hawley.

He finds no fault with their opinion about the true God, but that it was not clear and distinct enough. Stillingfleet.

He that but conceives a crime in thought,
Contracts the danger of an actual fault;

Then what must he expect that still proceeds Dryden.

To commit sin, and work up thoughts to deeds.

If you like not my poem, the fault may possibly be in my writing; but more probably 'tis in your morals, which cannot bear the truth of it. Dryden.

They wholly emulate the nature of criticism, who think its business is principally to find fault. Dryden.

'To be desirous of a good name, and careful to do every thing, that we innocently may, to obtain it, is so far from being a fault, even in private persons, that it is their great and indispensible duty. Asterbury.

Before his sacred name flies ev'ry fault,

And each exalted stanza reems with thought.

Which of our thum-cap'd ancestors found fault,

For want of sugar-tongs, or spoons for salt?

Being void of all friendship and enmity, they never complain, nor find fault with the times. Swift.

FEATHER, n. f. [feðer, Saxon; feder, German.]

1. The skin of birds.

Look, as I blow this feather from my face.

Shakespeare.

The brave eagle does with sorrow see

The forest wasted, and that lofty tree,

Which holds her nest, about to be o'erthrown,

Before the feathers of her young are grown;

She will not leave them, nor she cannot stay,

But bears them boldly on her wings away.

Waller.

When a man in the dark presses either corner of his eye with his finger, and turns his eye away from his finger, he will see a circle of colours like those in the feathers of a peacock's tail.

Newton.

I am bright as an angel, and light as a feather.

Swift.

2. Kind; nature; species: from the proverbial expression, birds of a feather; that is, of a species.

A featherdriver had the residue of his lungs filled with th fine dust or down of feathers.

Darham.

FEATHERED, adj. [from feather.]

1. Cloathed

be any way conveyed from him. So that no man in England has directum dominium, that is, the very property or demerit in any land, but the prince in right of his crown; for though he that has fee has ius perpetuum & utile dominium, yet he owes a duty for it, and therefore it is not simply his own. Fee is divided into two sorts; fee-absolute, otherwise called fee-simple, and fee-conditional, otherwise termed fee-tail: fee-simple is that whereof we are seised in those general words, To us and our heirs for ever; fee-tail is that whereof we are seised to us and our heirs, with limitation; that is, the heirs of our body, &c. And fee-tail is either general or special: general is where land is given to a man, and the heirs of his body: fee-tail special is that where a man and his wife are seised of land to them and the heirs of their two bodies. Cowel.

Now like a lawyer, when he land would let,
Or sell fee-simples in his matter's name. Spenser.
Here's the lord of the soil come to seize me for a stray, for entering his fee-simple without leave. Shakespeare.

2. Property; peculiar.

What concern they?

The general cause; or is it a fee-grief,
Due to some single breach? Shakespeare.

3. Reward; gratification; recompense.

These be the ways by which, without reward,
Livings in courts be gotten, though full hard;
For nothing there is done without a fee. Halberd.

Not helping, death's my fee;

But if I help, what do you promise me? Shakespeare.

4. Payments occasionally claimed by persons in office.

Now that God and friends

Have turn'd my captive state to liberty,
At our enlargement what are thy due fees? Shakespeare.

5. Reward paid to physicians or lawyers.

He does not reject the person's pretensions, who does not know how to explain them; or refuse doing a good office for a man, because he cannot pay the fee of it. Addison.

6. Portion; pittance; share. Obsolete.

In pruning and trimming all manner of trees,
Reserve to each cattle their property fees. Tusser.

FE'FARM. n. f. [fee and farm.] Tenure by which lands are held from a superior lord

John surrendered his kingdoms to the pope, and took them back again, to hold in feffarm; which brought him into such hatred, as all his lifetime after he was possessed with fear. Davies.

FE'FEE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To reward; to pay.

No man fees the sun, no man purchases the light, nor errs
if he walks by it. South.

Watch the disease in time; for when within
The dropsy rages and extends the skin,
In vain for heliobore the patient craves,
And fees the doctor; but too late is wife. Dryden.

2. To bribe.

I have long loved her, and ingrossed opportunities to meet her; feed every slight occasion, that could but niggardly give me sight of her. Shakespeare.

3. To keep in hire.

There's not a thane of them but in his house
I have a fervent fee'd. Shakespeare.

FE'BLE. adj. [feible, French.] Weak; debilitated; sickly;
infirm; without strength of body or mind.

The men earned all the feeble upon asses to Jericho. 2 Chron.

Command th' assistance of a faithful friend,
But feeble are the succours I can send. Dryden.

How I have lov'd, excuse my falt'ring tongue;

My spirits feeble, and my pains are strong. Dryden.

We carry the image of God in us, a rational and immortal soul; and though we be now miserable and feeble, yet we aspire after eternal happiness, and finally expect a great exaltation of all our natural powers. Bentley.

A crutch that helps the weak alone,

Supports the feeble, but retards the strong. Smith.

FE'BLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To weaken; to enfeeble;
to deprive of strength or power. Not in use.

Or as a cattle reared high and round,

By subtle engines and malicious sight

Is undermined from the lowest ground,
And her foundation forc'd and feeble quite. Fairy Queen.

Shall that victorious hand be feeble here,

That in your chambers gave you chastisement? Shakespeare.

FE'BLEMINDED. adj. [feible and mind.] Weak of mind;
defective in resolution and constancy.

1. To supply with food.

Her heart and bowels through her back he drew,
And fed the hounds that help'd him to pursue. Dryden.

Boerhaave fed a sparrow with bread four days, in which time it eat more than its own weight. A bathurst.

2. To supply; to furnish.

A constant smoke arises from the warm springs that feed the many baths with which this island is stocked. Addison.

The breadth of the bottom of the hopper must be half the length of a barleycorn, and near as long as the rollers, that it may not feed them too fast. Mortimer.

3. To graze; to consume by cattle.

Once in three years feed your mowing lands, if you cannot get manure constantly to keep them in heart. Mortimer.

The frost will spoil the grass; for which reason take care to feed it close before winter. Mortimer.

4. To nourish; to cherish.

'How oft from pomp and state did I remove,

To feed despair, and cherish hopeless love? Prior.

5. To keep in hope or expectation.

Barbarossa learned the strength of the emperor, craftily feeding him with the hope of liberty. Knox.

6. To delight; to entertain; to keep from satiety.

The alteration of scenes, so it be without noise, feeds and relieves the eye, before it be full of the same object. Bacon.

FEED. v. n.

'To feed were best at home;
From thence the fawce to meat is ceremony;
Meeting were bare without it. Shakespeare.

2. To prey; to live by eating.

I am not covetous of gold;

Nor care I, who doth feed upon my cost. Shakespeare.

You cry against the noble senate, who,

Under the gods, keep you in awe, which else

Would feed on one another. Shakespeare.

Galen speaketh of the curing of the scirrhus of the liver by milk of a cow, that feedeth upon certain herbs. Bacon.

Some birds feed upon the berries of this vegetable. Brown.

He feeds on fruits, which, of their own accord,

The willing grounds and laden trees afford. Dryden.

The Brachmans were all of the same race, lived in fields and woods, and fed only upon rice, milk, or herbs. Temple.

All feed on one vain patron, and enjoy

Th' undesired blessing of his luxury. Pope.

3. To pasture; to place cattle to feed.

If a man shall cause a field to be eaten, and shall put in his beast, and shall feed in another man's field, he shall make restitution. Exodus.

4. To grow fat or plump.

FEED. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Food; that which is eaten.

A fearful deer then looks most about when he comes to the best feed, with a shuffling kind of tremor through all her principal parts. Sidney.

An old worked ox fats as well as a young one: their feed is much cheaper, because they eat no oats. Mortimer.

2. Pasture.

Besides his cote, his flocks and bounds of feed

Are now on sale. Shakespeare.

FE'EDER. n. f. [from feed.]

Not to his master's but his feeder's hand. Denham.

2. An exciter; an encourager.

When thou do'st hear I am as I have been,

Approach me, and thou shalt be as thou wast,

The tutor and the feeder of my riots. Shakespeare.

3. One that eats.

With eager feeding, food doth choke the feeder. Shakespeare.

We meet in Aristotle with one kind of thrush, called the missel-thrush, or feeder upon mistletoe. Brown's Vulgar Err.

4. One that eats nicely; one that lives luxuriously.

But that our feasts

In every mess have folly, and the feeders

Jest with it as a custom, I should blush

To see you so attired. Shakespeare.

But such fine feeders are no guest for me;

Riot agrees not with frugality:

Then, that unfashionable man am I,

With me they starve for want of ivory. Dryden.

FEEL. pret. felt; part pass. felt. v. n. [fælan, Saxon.]

1. To have perception of things by the touch.

This hand, whose touch,

Whose ev'ry touch would force the feeler's foul

To th' oath of loyalty. Shakespeare.

2. The horns or antennæ of insects.

Insects clean their eyes with their forelegs as well as antennae; and as they are perpetually feeling and searching before them with their feelers or antennæ, I am apt to think that besides wiping and cleaning the eyes, the uses here named may be admitted. Derham.

FEELING. participial adj. [from feel.]

1. Expressive of great sensibility.

O wretched state of man in self-division!

O well thou say'st a feeling declaration

Thy tongue hath made of Cupid's deep incision. Sidney.

Thy wailing words do much my spirits move,

They uttered are in such a feeling fashion. Sidney.

Write 'till your ink be dry, and with your tears

Moist it again; and frame some feeling line,

That may discover such integrity. Shakespeare.

2. Sensibly felt. This sense is not sufficiently analogical.

A most poor man made tame to fortune's blows,

Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows,

Am pregnant to good pity. Shakespeare.

I had a feeling sense

Of all your royal favours; but this last

Strikes through my heart. Southern.

FEELING. n. f. [from feel.]

1. The sense of touch.

Why was the fight

To such a tender ball as th' eye confin'd?

So obvious and so easy to be quench'd,

And not, as feeling, through all parts diffus'd,

That the might look at will through ev'ry pore. Milton.

2. Sensibility; tenderness.

The apprehension of the good,

Gives but the greater feeling to the worse. Shakespeare.

Their king out of a princely feeling, was spating and compassionate towards his subjects. Bacon.

3. Perception.

Great persons had need to borrow other mens opinions to think themselves happy; for if they judge by their own feeling, they cannot find it. Bacon.

As we learn what belongs to the body by the evidence of sense, so we learn what belongs to the soul by an inward consciousness, which may be called a sort of internal feeling. Watts.

FEELINGLY. adv. [from feeling.]

1. With expression of great sensibility.

The prince might judge that he meant himself, who spoke so feelingly. Sidney.

He would not have talked so feelingly of Codrus's bed, if there had been room for a bedfellow in it. Pope.

2. So as to be sensibly felt.

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,

The season's difference; as the icy phang,

And churlish chiding of the Winter's wind,

Which when it bites and blows upon my body,

Ev'n 'till I shrink with cold, I smile and say,

This is no flattery: these are counsellors,

That feelingly persuade me what I am. Shakespeare.

He feelingly knew, and had trial of the late good, and of the new purchased evil. Raleigh.

FEET. n. f. The plural of foot.

His brothers image to his mind appears, inflames his heart with rage, and wings his feet with fear. Pope's Statius.

FEETLESS. adj. [from feet.] Without feet.

Geoffrey of Bouillon broched three feetless birds, called Al-lerions, upon his arrow. Comden.

In your dear highness's love. Shakespeare.

What a glorious entertainment and pleasure would fill and felicitate his spirit, if he could grasp all in a single survey. Watts.

2. To congratulate.

They might proceed unto forms of speeches, felicitating the good, or deprecating the evil to follow. Brown's Pastor Err.

FELICITATION. n. f. [French, from felicitare.] Congratulation.FELICITOUS. adj. [felix, Latin.] Happy.FELICITOUSLY. adv. [from felicitatus.] Happily.FELICITY. n. f. [felicitas, Latin; felicité, Fr.] Happiness; prosperity; blissfulness; blessedness.

The joyous day, dear Lord, with joy begin,

And grant that we, for whom thou didst die,

Being with thy dear blood clean wash'd from sin,

May live for ever in felicité. Spenser.

Others in virtue plac'd felicité;

But virtue join'd with riches and long life,

In corporal pleasure lie, and careless ease. Milton.

So the felicités of her wonderful reign may be complete.

How great, how glorious a felicité, how adequate to the desires of a reasonable nature, is revealed to our hopes in the gospel! Atterbury's Sermon.

FELINE. adj. [felinus, Latin.] Like a cat; pertaining to a cat.

Even as in the beaver; from which he differs principally in his teeth, which are canine, and in his tail, which is felinus, or a long taper. Green.

FELL. adj. [pelle, Saxon.]

1. Cruel; barbarous; inhuman.

It seemed fury, discord, madness fell,
Flew from his lap when he unfolds the same. Fairfax.

So *fell*st foes,

Whose passions and whose plots have broke their sleep,
To take the one the other, by some chance,
Some trick not worth an egg, shall grow dear friends. Shak.

That infant was I turn'd into a hart,
And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds,
E're since pursue me. Shakespeare.

2. Savage; ravenous; bloody.
I know thee, love I wild as the raging main,
More fell than tigers on the Libyan plain.
Scorning all the taming arts of man,
The keen hyena, *fell*st of the fell. Thomson.

FELL. n. f. [felle, saxon.] The skin; the hide.
Wipe thine eye;
The gougiers shall devour them, flesh and fell,
Ere they shall make us weep. Shakespeare.

The time has been in fens would have cool'd
To hear a night-shriek; and my fell of hair
Would at a dismal treatise rouse and stir. Shakespeare.

Fe FELL. v. a. [*fell*en, German.]

1. To knock down; to bring to the ground.
Villain, stand, or I'll fell thee down. Shakespeare.

Now wards a *fel*ing blow, now strikes again. Daniel.
Taking the small end of his musket in his hand, he struck him on the head with the stock, and *fell*ed him. Raleigh.
His fall, for the present, struck an earthquake into all minds; nor could the vulgar be induced to believe he was *fell*ed. Howell.

On their whole host I flew Unarm'd, and with a trivial weapon fell'd
Their choicest youth: they only liv'd who fled. Milton.
Whom with such force he struck, he fell'd him down,
And cleft the circle of his golden crown. Dryden.
I fell'd a man of bearded face,
His limbs all cover'd with a shining case. Dryden.

2. To hew down; to cut down.
Then would he seem a farmer that would sell
Bargains of woods, which he did lately fell. Spenser.

Proud Arcite and fierce Palamon,
In mortal battle, doubling blow on blow;
Like lightning flam'd their fauchions to and fro,
And shot a dreadful gleam; so strong they struck,
There seem'd less force requir'd to fell an oak. Dryden.

FELL. The pretense of To fall.
None on their feet might stand,
Though standing else as rocks; but down they fell
By thousands, angel or archangel roll'd. Milton.

FELLER. n. f. [from fell.] One that hews down.
Since thou art laid down, no feller is come up against us.
Jl. xiv. 8.

FELLIFLUOUS. adj. [fell and flu, Latin.] Flowing with gall. Diell.

FELLMONGER. n. f. [from fell.] A dealer in hides.

FELLESS. n. f. [from fell.] Cruelty; savageness; fury; rage.
When his brother saw the red blood trail
Adown so fall, and all his armour steep,
For every fellness loud he gan to weep. Spenser.

FELLOE. n. f. [felge, Danish.] The circumference of a wheel; the outward part. It is often written fally or jelly.
Out, out, thou trumpet fortune! all you gods,
In general iynod, take away her power;
Break all the spokes and felles from her wheel,
And bow the round nave down the hill of heav'n. Shakspeare.

Their axle-trees, naves, felles, and spokes were all molten.
1 Kings vii. 33.

FELLOW. n. f. [quasi, to follow, Minshaw; from fe, faith, and lag, bound, Saxon; Janus; follow, Scottish.]

1. A companion; one with whom we consort.
In youth I had twelve *fellow*s like unto myself, but not one of them came to a good end. Ascham.

To be your fellow,
You may deny me; but I'll be your servant,
Whether you will or no. Shakespeare.

Have we not plighted each our holy oath,
That one should be the common good of both;
One soul should both inspire, and neither prove
His fellow's hindrance in pursuit of love? Dryden.

2. An associate; one united in the same affair.
Each on his fellow for assistance calls;
At length the fatal fabric mounts the walls. Dryden.

3. One of the same kind.
Let partial spirits still aloud complain,
Think themselves injury'd that they cannot reign;
And own no liberty, but where they may Without controul upon their *fellow*s prey. Waller.

A shepherd once his favourite dog: he fed him with his own hand, and took more care of him than of any of his *fellow*s.
L'Estrange.

4. Equal; peer.

Chiefstain of the rest
I chose him here: the earth shall him allow;
His *fellow*s laie, shall be his subjects now. Fairfax.
So you are to be hereafter *fellow*s, and no longer servants. Sidney.

5. One thing suited to another; one of a pair.
When virtue is lodged in a body, that seems to have been prepared for the reception of vice: the soul and the body do not seem to be *fellow*s. Armin.

6. One like another: as, this knave hath not his fellow.

7. A familiar appellation used sometimes with fondness, sometimes with esteem; but generally with some degree of contempt.
This is Othello's ancient, as I take it.
—The same indeed; a very valiant fellow. Shakespeare.

An officer was in danger to have lost his place, but his wife made his peace; whereupon a pleasant fellow said, that he had been crucified, but that he saved himself upon his horns.
Bacon, Apophthegm 4.

Full fifteen thousand lusty *fell*ows
With fire and sword the fort maintain;
Each was a Hercules, you tell us,
Yet out they march'd like common men. Prior.

8. A word of contempt: the foolish mortal; the mean wretch;
the sorry rascal.
Thou great *fell*ow scornfully receiving them, as foolish birds fallen into their net, it pleas'd the eternal justice to make them suffer death by their hands. Sidney.

Cassio hath here been set on in the dark
By Roderigo, and *fellow*s that are 'scap'd:
He's almost slain, and Roderigo dead. Shakespeare.

I have great comfort from this *fell*ow: methinks he hath no drowning mark about him; his complexion is perfect gallows. Shakespeare.

Opinion, that did help me to the crown,
Had left me loyal to possession;
And left me in reputels banishment,
A fellow of no mark nor likelihood. Shakespeare.

How oft the sight of means, to do ill deeds,
Makes deeds ill done? for had it not shewn been by,
A *fell*ow by the hand of nature mark'd,
Quoted, and sign'd to do a deed of shame,
This murder had not come into my mind. Shakespeare.

The Moor's abus'd by some most villainous knave,
Some base notorious knave, some surly *fell*ow. Shakespeare.

The *fell*ow had taken more fish than he could feed while they were sweet. L'Estrange.

As next of kin, Achilles' arms I claim;
This fellow would ingraft a foreign name
Upon our stock, and the Sisyphian feed
By fraud and theft asserts his father's breed. Dryden.

You will wonder how such an ordinary *fell*ow, as this Mr.
Wood, could have got his majesty's broad seal. Swift.

You'll find, if once the monarch asks the monk,
Or, cozier like, the parson will be drunk,
Worth makes the man, and want of it the fellow;
The rest is all but leather and prunella. Pope.

9. Sometimes it implies a mixture of pity with contempt.
The provost commanded his men to hang him on the nearest tree: then the *fell*ow cried out that he was not the miller, but the miller's man. Hayward.

10. A member of a college that shares its revenues.
Fe FELLOW. v. a. To suit with; to pair with; to match.

Fellow is often used in composition to mark community of nature, station, or employment.

Imagination,
With what's unreal, thou co-active art,
And fellow'st nothing. Shakespeare.

design.
My fellow-labourers have likewise commissioned me to perform in their behalf this office of dedication. Dryden.

FELLOW-SERVANT. n. f. One that has the same master. Not

- Nor let's think we in heav'n of thee on earth,
Than of our fellow-servant; and inquire Gladly into the ways of God with man. Milton.
Fair fellow-servant! may your gentle ear
Prove more propitious to my slighted care
Than the bright dame's we serve. Waller.
Their fathers and yours were fellow-servants to the same heavenly master while they lived; nor is that relation dissolved by their death, but ought still to operate among their surviving children. Atterbury.
- FELLOW-SOLDIER. n. f. One who fights under the same commander. An endearing appellation used by officers to their men. Shakefp.
Come, fellow-soldier, make thou proclamation. Shakefp.
Epaphroditus, my brother and companion in labour, and fellow-soldier. Phil.
- FELLOW-STUDENT. n. f. One who studies in company with another.
I pray thee, do not mock me, fellow-student;
I think it was to see my mother's wedding. Shakefp.
If you have no fellow-student at hand, tell it over with your acquaintance. Watts.
- FELLOW-SUBJECT. n. f. One who lives under the same government.
The bleeding condition of their fellow-subjects was a feather in the balance with their private ends. Swift.
- FELLOW-SUFFERER. n. f. One who shares in the same evils;
one who partakes the same sufferings with another.
How happy was it for those poor creatures, that your grace was made their fellow-sufferer? And how glorious for you, that you chose to want rather than not relieve the wants of others?
Dryden's Fables.
- We in some measure shares the necessities of the poor at the same time that we relieve them, and make ourselves not only their patrons but fellow-sufferers. Addison.
- FELLOW-WRITER. n. f. One who writes at the same time, or one the same subject.
Since they cannot raise themselves to the reputation of their fellow-writers, they must sink it to their own pitch, if they would keep themselves upon a level with them. Addison.
- FELLOWFEELING. n. f. [fellow and feeling.]
1. Sympathy.
It is a high degree of inhumanity not to have a fellowfeel-
ing of the misfortune of my brother. L'Estrange.
2. Combination; joint interest.
Even your milkwoman and your nurserymaid have a fellow- feeling. Arbutnot.
- FELLOWLIKE. adj. [fellow and like.] Like a companion;
FELLOWLY. adj. on equal terms; companionable.
All which good parts he graciously with a good fellowlike, kind, and respectful carriage. Carew.

With fellowly neighbourhood seemeth not strange. Tupper.
- FELLOWSHIP. n. f. [from fellow.]
1. Companionship; comfort; society.
This boy cannot tell what he would have,
Burkneels and holds up hands for fellowship. Shakefp.
From blissful bows,
Of amaranth shade, fountain, or spring,
By the waters of life, where'er they stay
In fellowships of joy, the sons of light Hailed. Milton.
There is no man but God puts excellent things into his possession, to be used for the common good; for men are made for society and mutual fellowship. Calamy.
God having designed man for a sociable creature, made him not only with an inclination and under the necessity to have fellowship with those of his own kind, but furnished him also with language, which was to be the great instrument and cement of society. Locke.
2. Association; confederacy; combination.
We would not die in that man's company,
That tears his fellowship to die with us. Shakefp.
Those laws do bind men absolutely, even as they are men, although they have never any settled fellowship, never any solemn agreement amongst themselves what to do, or not to do.
Hooker.
Most of the other Christian princes were drawn into the fellowship of that war. Knutley.
3. Equality.
4. Partnership; joint interest.
Nearer acquainted, now I feel by proof
That fellowship in pain divides not smart,
Nor lightens aught each man's peculiar load. Milton.
O love! thou sternly dost thy pow'r maintain,
And wilt not bear a rival in thy reign;
Tyrants and thou all fellowship disdain. Dryden.
5. Company; state of being together.
The great contention of the sea and skies
Parted our fellowship. But hark, a sail!
6. Frequency of intercourse; social pleasure.
In a great town friends are scattered, so that there is not that fellowship which is in less neighbourhoods. Bacon.

7. Fitness and fondness for fætal entertainments, with good pre-fix'd.
He had by his excessive good fellowships, which was grateful to all the company, made himself popular with all the officers of the army. Clarendon.
8. An establishment in the college with share in its revenue.
Corofodes having, by the most extreme parsimony, saved thirty-four pounds out of a beggarly fellowship, went up to London. Swift.
9. [In arithmetic.] That rule of plural proportion whereby we balance accounts, depending between divers persons, having put together a general stock, so that they may every man have his proportional gain, or sustain his proportional part of loss. Cocker.
10. A rule in arithmetic, by which two or more independent operations of the rule of three may divide any given number into unequal parts, proportional to certain other numbers.
It is so called, because the more common and useful application thereof is in the division of gain, losses, or other things, among partners in company. Malmesbury.
- FELLY. adv. [from fell.] Cruelly; inhumanly; barbarously.
Fair ye be sure, but cruel and unkind;
As is a pyger, that with greediness
Hunts after blood, when he by chance doth find
A feeble beast, doth felly him oppress. Spenser.
- FELON-DESE. n. f. [In law.] He that committeth felony by murdering himself.
- FELON. n. f. [from felon, French; fel, low Latin; fel, Saxon.]
1. One who has committed a capital crime.
I apprehend thee for a felon here. Shakefp.
And often have you brought the wily fox,
Chas'd even amidst the folds; and made to bleed,
Like felon, where they did the murderous deed. Dryden.
2. A whitlow; a tumour formed between the bone and its investing membrane, very painful.
The malign paronychia is that which is commonly called a felon. W. Jones.
- FELON. adj. Cruel; traitorous; inhuman.
Ay me! what thing on earth, that all things breed,
Might be the cause of so impetuous pligh!
What fury, or what fiend with felon deeds,
Hath turned up so malicious despite!
Then bids prepare thy hospitable treat,
Vain shews of love to veil his felon hate. Spenser.
- FELONIOUS. adj. [from felon.] Wicked; traitorous; villanous; malignant; pernicious; destructive.
This man conceived the duke's death; but what was the motive of that felonious conception is in the clouds. Watts.
O thievesight night!
Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lantern thus close up thy flars
That nature hung in heav'n, and fill'd the lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the mistle and lonely traveller? Milton.
In thy felonious heart though venom lies,
It does but touch thy Irish pen and dies. Dryden.
- FELONIOUSLY. adv. [from felonious.] In a felonious way.
FELONIOUS. adj. [from felon.] Wicked; felonious.
I am like for desperate dole to die,
Through felonious force of mine enemy. Spenser.
- FELONY. n. f. [from felon, Fr. felonie, low Latin, from fel.] A crime denounced capital by the law; an enormous crime.

be loose. Alvins.
TO FELT. v. a. [from the noun.] To unite without weaving.
The same wool one man felts into a hat, another weaves it into cloth, another into keisey. Hale.
TO FELTRE. v. a. [from felt.] To clot together like felt.
His felted locks, that on his bosom fell,
On rugged mountains briers and thorns resemble. Fairfax.
- FELUCCA. n. f. [from felca, Fr. feltan, Arab.] A small open boat with six oars. D. H.
- FEMALE. n. f. [from femelle, French; femella, Latin.] A she;
one of the sex which brings young.
God created man in his own image, male and female created he them. Genesis.
Man, more divine,
Lord of the wide world, and wide wat'ry seas,
Indu'd with intellectual sense and soul,
Are matters to their females, and their lords. Shakefp.
- FEMALE. adj.
1. Not masculine; belonging to a she.
If by a female hand he had foreseen
He was to die, his wish had ta'en been
The lance and double ax of the fair warrior queen. Dryden.
2. FEMALE.

2. FEMALE Rhymes. Double rhymes so called, because in French, from which the term is taken, they end in e weak or feminine. These rhymes are female:

Th' excess of heat is but a fable;

We know the torrid zone is now found habitable. Cowley.

The female rhymes are in use with the Italian in every line, with the Spaniard promiscuously, and with the French alternately, as appears from the Alarique, the Pucelle, or any of their later poems. Dryden.

FEMME COURT. n. f. [French.] A married woman; who is also said to be under covert baron. Blount.

FEMME SOLA. n. f. [French.] A single woman; an unmarried woman.

FEMINATIVITY. n. f. [from femina, Latin.] Female nature. If in the minority of natural vigour the parts of femininity take place, upon the increase or growth thereof the masculine appears. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FEMININE. adj. [femininus, Latin.]

1. Of that sex that brings young; female.

Thus we chaff the god of wine

With water that is feminine,

Until the cooler nymph abate

His wrath, and so incorporate. Cleveland.

2. Soft; tender; delicate.

Her heav'nly form

Angelick, but more soft and feminine. Milton.

3. Effeminate; emasculated.

Ninias was no man of war at all, but altogether feminine and subjected to ease and delicacy. Raleigh.

FEMININE. n. f. A the; one of the sex that brings young; a female.

O! why did God create at last

This novelty on earth, this fair defect

Of nature? And not fill the world at once

With men, as angels, without feminin? Milton.

FEMORAL. adj. [femorali, Latin.] Belonging to the thigh.

The largest crooked needle should be used in taking up the femoral arteries in amputation. Sharp.

FEN. n. f. [Fenn, Saxon; venne, Dutch.] A marsh; low flat and moist ground; a moor; a bog.

Mexico is a city that stands in the midst of a great marsh or fen. Abbot.

I go alone,

Like to a lonely dragon, that his fen

Makes fear'd and talk'd of more than seen. Shakespeare.

Yon common cry of curs, whose breath I hate,

As reek o' th' rotten fen. Shakespeare.

The surface is of black fen earth. Woodward.

He to Portina's wat'ry marshes went;

A long canal the muddy fen divides;

And with a clear unflood'd current glides. Addison.

FENBERRY. n. f. [fen and berry.] A kind of blackberry. Skinner.

FENCE. n. f. [from defence.]

1. Guard; security; outward; defence.

That proved not fence enough to the reputation of their oppressors. Dracon of Pity.

There no fence against inundations, earthquakes, or hurricanes. L'Estrange.

To put them out of their parents view, at a great distance, is to expose them to the greatest dangers of their whole life, when they have the least fence and guard against them. Locke.

Let us hear this awful corps to Caesar,

And lay it in his sight, that it may stand

A fence betwixt us and the victor's wrath. Addison.

2. Inclosure; mound; hedge.

In vain did nature's wife command

Divide the waters from the land,

If daring ships, and men prophane,

Invade th' inviolable main;

Th' eternal fencies overlap,

And pass at will the boundless deep. Dryden.

Shall I mention make

Of the vast mound that binds the Luerine lake?

Or the disdainful sea, that, shut from thence,

Roars round the structure, and invades the fence? Dryden.

Employ their wiles and unavailing care,

To pals the fencies, and surprize the fair. Pope.

3. The art of fencing; defence.

I bruied my skiu th' other day, with playing at sword and dagger with a master of fen e. Shakespeare.

4. Skill in defence.

I'll prove it on his body, if he dare,

Despite his nice fence and his active practice. Shakespeare.

To FENCE. v. a.

1. To inclose; to secure by an inclosure or hedge.

Th' inhabitants each pasture and each plain

Destroyed have, each field to waste is laid;

In fenced towers bestowen is their grain;

Before thou cam'st this kingdom to invade. Fairfax.

He hath fenced up my way that I cannot pass, and set darkness in my paths. Job.

Nº LIV.

Thou hast clothed me with skin and flesh, and hast fenced me with bones and sinews. Job.

He went about to make a bridge to a strong city, which was fenced about with walls. 2 Ma.

See that the churchyard be fenced in with a decent wall, or other inclosure. Aspliff.

2. To guard.

So much of adders wisdom I have learnt,

To fence my ear against thy sorceries. Milton.

With love to friend, th' impatient lover went,

Fenced from the thorns, and trod the deep descent. Dryden.

To FENCE. v. n.

1. To practise the arts of manual defence; to practise the use of weapons.

He having got some iron, should have it beaten into swords, and put into his servants hands to fence with, and bang one another. Lucie.

2. To guard against; to act on the defensive.

Vice is the more stubborn as well as the more dangerous evil, and therefore in the first place to be fenced against. Locke.

3. To fight according to art.

If a throttle ling, he falls strait a capering:

He will fence with his own shadow. Shakespeare.

A beauteous heifer in the wood is bred;

The flopping warriors, aiming head to head,

Engage their clashing horns; with dreadful sound

The forest rattles, and the rocks rebound;

They fence and push, and, pushing, loudly roar,

Their dewlaps and their sides are bath'd in gore. Dryden.

A man that cannot fence will keep out of bullics and gamblers company. Locke.

These, being polemical arts, could no more be learned alone than fencing or cudgelplying. Arbutnot and Pope.

FENCELESS. adj. [from fence.] Without inclosure; open.

Each motion of the heart rises to fury,

And love in their weak bosoms is a rage

As terrible as hate, and as destructive:

So the wind roars o'er the wide fenceless ocean,

And heaves the billows of the boiling deep,

Alike from North, from South, from East, from West. Rever.

FENCER. n. f. [from fence.] One who teaches or practises the use of weapons, or science of defence.

Calmness is great advantage: he that lets

Another chafe, may warm him at his fire,

Mark all his wand'rings, and enjoy his frets;

As cunning fencers suffer heat to tire. Herbert.

A nimble fencer will put in a thrust so quick, that the foil will be in your bosom when you thought it a yard off. Digby.

FENCEABLE. adj. [from fence.] Capable of defence. Addison.

FENCINGMASTER. n. f. [fence and master.] One who teaches the use of weapons.

FENCINGSCHOOL. n. f. [fence and school.] A place in which the use of weapons is taught.

If a man be to prepare his son for duels, I had rather mine should be a good wrestler than an ordinary fencer, which is the most a gentleman can attain to, unless he will be constantly in the fencing-school, and every day exercising. Locke.

To FEND. v. a. [from defend.] To keep off; to shut out.

Spread with straw the bedding of thy fold,

With fern beneath, to fend the bitter cold. Dryden.

To FEND. v. n. To dispute; to shift off a charge.

The dexterous management of terms, and being able to fend and prove with them, passes for a great part of learning; but it is learning distinct from knowledge. Locke.

FENDER. n. f. [from fend.]

1. An iron plate laid before the fire to hinder coals that fall from rolling forward to the floor.

2. Any thing laid or hung at the side of a ship to keep off violence.

FENERATION. n. f. [feneratio, Latin.] Fury; the gain of interest; the practice of increasing money by lending.

The hare figured not only pusillanimity and stupidity from its temper, but feneration and usury from its fecundity and superfecundation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FENUGREEK. n. f. [fenugreek, Latin.] A plant.

It hath a papilionaceous flower, out of whole empalement rises the pommel, which afterwards becomes a pod, somewhat plain, shaped like a horn, and full of seeds, for the most part rhomboid or kidney-shaped. Milner.

FENNEL. n. f. [feniculum, Latin.] A plant of strong scent.

It is an umbelliferous plant, whose leaves are divided into capillaceous jags: the petals of the flower are intire, and placed orbicularly, expanding in form of a rose: each flower is succeeded by two oblong thick gibbous seeds, chaucled on one side, and plain on the other. Milner.

A fav'ry odour breath, more pleas'd my sense Than smell of sweetest fennel, or the teas

Of ewe, or goat, dropping with milk at ev'n. Milton.

FENNELFLOWER. n. f. A plant.

FENNELGIANT. n. f. A plant.

It hath a large succulent milky root: the stalks are spongy, and filled with pith: the flowers consist of many leaves, expanded in form of a rose, growing in an umbel: each flower is succeeded by two large oval-shaped flat seeds, which are very thin, and turn black when ripe: the leaves are like those of fenel. Miller.

FERNY. adj. [from fen.]

1. Marthy; boggy; moorish.

Driving in of piles is used for stone or brick houses, and that only where the ground proves fenny or moorish. Maxon.

The hungry crocodile, and hilling snake, Prior.

Lurk in the trouble'd stream and fenny brake.

FERINE. adj. [ferinus, Latin.] Wild; savage.

The only difficulty that remains is touching those ferine, noxious, and untameable beasts; as lions, tigers, wolves and bears. Hale.

FERINENESS. n. f. [from ferine.] Barbarity; savageness; wildness.

A ferine and necessitous kind of life, a conversation with those that were fallen into a barbarous habit of life, would assimilate the next generation to barbarism and ferineness. Hale.

FERTY. n. f. [feritas, Latin.] Barbarity; cruelty; wildness; savageness.

He reduced him from the most abject and stupid ferty to his senses, and to sober reason. Woodward.

FERMENT. v. a. [ferment, Latin; fermenter, French.]

To exalt or raise by intestine motion of parts.

Ye vigorous twins! I while you ferment your blood,

And puer spirits swell the sprightly flood,

Now range the hills, the thickest woods beset,

Wind the shrill horn, or spread the waving net. Pope.

To FERMENT. v. n. To have the parts put into intestine motion.

FERMENT. n. f. [ferment, French; fermentum, Latin.]

1. That which causes intestine motion.

The semen puts females into a fever, upon impregnation; and all animal humours which poison, are putrefying ferments. Flyger on the Humours.

Subdue and cool the ferment of desire. Rogers.

2. The intestine motion; tumult.

FERMENTABLE. adj. [from ferment.] Capable of fermentation.

FERMENTAL. adj. [from ferment.] Having the power to cause fermentation.

Cucumbers, being waterish, fill the veins with crude and windy ferocities, that contain little salt or spirit, and debilitate the vital activity and fermental faculty of the stomach. Brown.

FERMENTATION. n. f. [fermentatio, Latin.] A flow motion of the intestine particles of a mixt body, arising usually from the operation of some active acid matter, which rarifies, exalts, and subtilizes the soft and sulphureous particles: as when leaven or yeast rarifies, lightens, and ferments bread or wort, &c. And this motion differs much from that usually called ebullition or effervescence, which is a violent boiling and struggling between an acid and an alkali, when mixed together.

The juice of grapes, after fermentation, will yield a ferment ardens Hydro.

A man, by tumbling his thoughts, and forming them into expressions, gives them a new kind of fermentum; which works them into a finer body, and makes them much clearer than they were before. Calver.

The sap, in fluent dance,

And lively fermentation, mounting, spreads

All this innumerable colour'd scene of things. Flaminius.

FERMENTATIVE. adj. [from ferment.] Causing fermentation; having the power to cause fermentation.

Aromatick spirits destroy by their fermentative heat. Arct.

FERN. n. f. [earn, Saxon.] A plant.

The male fern is common on the stumps of trees in woods, and on the banks of ditches: the leaves are formed of a number of small pinnales, dentated on the edges, and set close by one another on slender ribs. On the back of these pinnales are produced the seeds, small and extremely numerous. Decoctions of the root and diet drinks have been used in diarrhoeic disorders and obstructions. The country people esteem it a sovereign remedy for the rickets in children. Hill.

Black was the forest, thick with beech & blood,

Horrid with fern, and intricate with thorn;

Few paths of human feet or tracks of beasts were worn. Dryden.

There are great varieties of fern in different parts of the world; but they are seldom cultivated in gardens. Miller.

FERNY. adj. [from fern.] Overgrown with fern.

The herd suffic'd, did late repair

To ferny heaths, and to their forest lair. Dryden.

FEROCIOUS. adj. [ferax, Latin; ferus, French.]

1. Savage; fierce.

2. Ravenous; rapacious.

The hare, that becometh a prey unto man, unto beasts and fowls of the air, is fruitful even unto superfecundation; but the lion and ferocious animal hath young ones but seldom, and but one at a time. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Smedley rose in majesty of mud;

Shaking the horrors of his ample brows,

And each ferocious feature grim with ooze. Pope's Dunciad.

FEROCITY. n. f. [feracitas, Lat. ferocitas, Fr. from ferous.]

Savageness; wildness; fierceness.

An uncommon ferocity in my countenance, with the remarkable flatness of my nose, and extent of my mouth, have procured me the name of lion. Di. l.

Untaught, uncultivated, as they were Inhospitable, full of ferocity. Philop.

FERPOUS. adj. [ferreus, Latin.] Irony; of iron.

In the body of glass there is no ferrous or magnetic nature. Brown's Vulg. Err.

FERRET. n. f. [fured, Welsh; furet, French; ferra, Sans.]

1. A kind of rat with red eyes and a long snout, used to catch rabbits.

With what an eager earnestness she looked, having discerning not only in her ferret eyes, but while the snake as yet seemed to threaten her chin. Lucy.

Looks with such ferret and such fiery eyes,

As we have seen him. Shakespeare.

Coney are destroyed or taken either by ferrets or pure nets. Montes.

2. A kind of narrow ribband.

To FERRET. v. a. [from the noun.] To drive out of hiding places, as the ferret drives the coney.

The archbishop had ferreted him out of all his holds. Hill.

FERRETER. n. f. [from ferret.] One that hunts another in his privacies.

FERRICK. n. f. [from ferry.] The fare paid at a ferry.

FERRUGINOUS. adj. [ferrugineus, Fr. ferrugineus, Latin.]

Partaking of the particles and qualities of iron.

They are cold, hot, purgative, diuretic, ferruginous, &c.

line, petrefying and bituminous.

FERRULE. n. f. [from ferrum, iron, Latin.] An iron rod put round any thing to keep it from cracking.

The fingers end are strengthened with nails, as we ferret

the ends of our slaves or folk with iron hoops or ferret. Rogers.

To FERREY. v. a. [Saxon, to pais, Saxon; fere, German; fere, Latin.] I do not love Latin passage. Stinner imagines that this whole family of words may be deduced from the Latin veh. I do not love Latin originals; but if such must be fought, may not these words be more naturally derived from ferri, to be carried? To carry over in a boat. Cyprian.

Cymocles heard and saw,
He loudly call'd to such as were abroad,
The little bark unto the shore to draw,
And him to ferry over that deep ford. Spenser.
FERRY. v. n. To pass over water in a vessel of carriage.
Thence hurried back to fire,
They ferry over this Lethæan found
Both to and fro, their sorrow to augment. Milton.
FERRY. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A vessel of carriage; a vessel in which goods or passengers are carried over water.
By this time was the worthy Guyon brought Unto the other side of that wide strand,
Where she was rowing, and for passage fought:
Him needed not long call, the loon to hand
Her ferry brought. Spenser.
There went a ferryboat to carry over the king's household.

Bring them with imagin'd speed
Unto the Traject, to the common ferry
Which trades to Venice. Shakespeare.
I went down to the river Brent in the ordinary ferry. Addison.
2. The passage over which the ferryboat passes.
FERRYMAN. n. f. [ferry and man.] One who keeps a ferry;
one who for hire transports goods and passengers over the water.

I pass, methought, the melancholy flood,
With that grim ferryman, which poets write of,
Unto the kingdom of perpetual night. Shakespeare.
The common ferryman of Egypt, that waited over the dead bodies from Memphis, was made by the Greeks the ferryman of hell, and solemn stories raised after him. Brown.
The grisly ferryman of hell deny'd
Æneas entrance, 'till he knew his guide. Roscommon.

FERTH, or fath. Common terminations are the same as in English an army; coming from the Saxon word fyrð. Gilson.
FERTILE. adj. [fertile, French; fertilis, Latin.]
1. Fruitful; abundant; plentiful.

I had hope of France,
As firmly as I hope for fertile England. Shakespeare.
I have had a large, a fair, and a pleasant field; so fertile,
that it has given me two harvests in a Summer. Dryden.
I ask whether in the uncultivated waste of America, left to nature, without any improvement, a thousand acres yield the needy inhabitants as many conveniences of life as ten acres of equally fertile land do in Devonshire? Locke.

View the wide earth adorn'd with hills and woods,
Rich in her herds, and fertile by her floods. Blackmore.
2. With of before the thing produced.
The earth is fertile of all kind of grain. Camden.
So his happy country is extremely fertile, as of those above,
so likewise of its productions under ground. Woodward.
FERTILNESS. n. f. [from fertile.] Fruitfulness; fecundity.
FERTILITATE. v. a. [from fertilis.] To fecundate;
to fertilize; to make fruitful or productive.

A cock will in one day fertilize the whole racemation or cluster of eggs, which are not excluded in many weeks after.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FERTILITY. n. f. [fertilis, Latin.] Fecundity; abundance; fruitfulness; plentifulness.
I will go root away
The noisom weeds, that without profit suck
The soil's fertility from wholesome flowers. Shakespeare.

Paradise itself exceeded in beauty and fertility; and these places had but a resemblance thereof. Raleigh.
To inundations Egypt, through which the Nile flows, and the Indies owe their extraordinary fertility, and those mighty crops they produce after these waters are withdrawn. Woodward.
TO FERTILIZE. v. a. [fertiliser, French.] To make fruitful; to make plentiful; to make productive; to fecundate.

Rain-water carries along with it a sort of terrestrial matter that fertilizes the land, as being proper for the formation of vegetables. Woodward.
FERTILY. adv. [from fertile.] Fruitfully; plentifully; plentifully; abundantly.

FERVENCY. n. f. [fervens, Latin.]
1. Heat of mind; ardour; eagerness.
Your diver
Did hang a fishskin on his hook, which he
With fervency drew up. Shakespeare.

2. Pious ardour; flame of devotion; zeal.
We have on all sides lost much of our first fervency towards
God. Hooker.
There must be zeal and fervency in him which propoeth for the rest those suits and supplications, which they by their joyful exclamations must ratify. Hooker.

When you pray, let it be with attention, with fervency, and with perseverance. Wake.
FERVENT. adj. [fervens, Lat. fervens, Fr.]
1. Hot; boiling.
From the phlegmatick humour, the proper alloy of fervent blood, will flow a future quietude and serenity. Watson.

2. Hot in temper; vehement.
They that are more fervent to dispute, be not always the most able to determine. Hooker.

3. Ardent in piety; warm in zeal; flaming with devotion.
This man being fervent in the spirit, taught diligently the things of the Lord. Acts.
So spake the fervent angel; but his zeal
None seconded, as out of icalion judg'd,
Or singular and rash. Milton.

Let all enquiries into the mysterious points of theology be carried on with fervent petitions to God, that he would dispose their minds to direct all their skill to the promotion of a good life. South.

FERVENTLY. adv. [from fervens.]
1. Eagerly; vehemently.
I hey all that charge did fervently apply,
With greedy malice and importune toil. Spenser.

2. With pious ardour; with holy zeal Epaphras saluteth you, labouring fervently for you in prayers. Calephum.
He cares not how or what he suffers, so he suffer well, and be the friend of Christ; nor where nor when he suffers, so he may do it frequently, fervently, and acceptably. Taylor.

FERVID. adj. [fervidus, Latin.]
1. Hot; burning; boiling.
2. Vehement; eager; zealous.

FERVIDITY. n. f. [from fervid.]
1. Heat.
2. Zeal; passion; ardour. Dist.
FERVIDNESS. n. f. [from fervid.] Ardour of mind; zeal; passion.

As to the healing of Malchus's ear, in the act of the meek lamb of God, it was a kind of injury done to him by the servidness of St. Peter, who knew not yet what spirit he was of. Bentley.

FERULA. n. f. [ferule, Fr. from ferula, giant fennel, Lat.] An instrument of correction with which young scholars are beaten on the hand: so named because anciently the stalks of fennel were used for this purpose.

These differ as much as the rod and ferule. Shaw.
TO FERULE. v. a. To chastise with the ferula.
FERVOUR. n. f. [feror, Lat. fervor, Fr.]
1. Heat; warmth.

Were it an undeniable truth that an effectual fervour proceeded from this star, yet would not the same determine the opinion. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Like bright Aurora, whose resurgent ray
Foretels the fervour of ensuing day,
And warns the shepherd with his flocks retreat
To leafy shadows, from the threatened heat. Waller.
These silver drops, like morning dew,
Foretell the fervour of the day;
So from one cloud soft show'rs we view,
And blasting lightnings burst away. Pope.

2. Heat of mind; zeal; ardour of devotion.
Odious it must needs have been to abolish that which all had held for the space of many ages, without reason so great as might in the eyes of impartial men appear sufficient to clear them from all blame of rash proceedings, if in fervour of zeal they had removed such things. Hooker.

Haply despair hath seiz'd her;
Or, wing'd with fervour of her love, she's flown
To her dear'd Polthumus. Shakespeare.
There will be at Loretto, in a few ages more, jewels of the greatest value in Europe, if the devotion of its princes continues in its present fervour. Addison.

FESQUE. n. f. [fesse, Dutch; fessu, French.] A small wire by which those who teach to read point out the letters.

Teach him an alphabet upon his fingers, making the points of his fingers of his left hand both on the inside to signify some letter, when any of them is pointed at by the forefinger of the right hand, or by any kind of fesque. Holder.

Teach them how many passions ought to move;
For such as cannot think, can never love;
And since they needs will judge the poet's art,
Point 'em with fesques to each thinning part. Dr. den.

FESSELS. n. f. A kind of bafe grain.
Didst not fessels or poor vetch to sow,
Or care to make Egyptian lentils thrive. Maj.

FESSE. n. f. [In heraldry.]
The fesse is so called of the Latin word fascia, a band or girdle, possessing the third part of the elcutcheon over the middle: if there be above one, you must call them bars; if with the field there be odd pieces, as seven or nine, then you must name the field, and say so many bars; if even, as six, eight, or ten, you must say barwife, or barry of six, eight, or ten, as the king of Hungary bears argent and gules barry of eight. Penham.

TO FESSTER. v. n. [fesse, in Bavarian, a swelling corrupted, famius.] To rankle; to corrupt; to grow virulent.
I might, even in my lady's presence, discover the force which had deeply festered within me. Sidney.
How

How should our fettered sores be cured?

Inward corruption and infected sin,
Not purg'd, not heal'd, behind remained still,
And fettering sore did rankle yet within.

I have some wounds upon me, and they smart

To hear themselves remember'd.

—Well might they fetter 'gainst ingratitude,

And tent themselves with death.

Mind that their souls

May make a peaceful and a sweet retire

From off their fields, where, wretches, their poor bodies

Must lie and fetter.

There was imagination, that between a knight whom the duke had taken into some good degree of favour, and Felton, there had been ancient quarrels not yet well healed, which might perhaps be fettering in his breast, and by a certain inflammation produce this effect.

Passion, anger, and unkindness may give a wound that shall bleed and smart; but it is treachery only that makes it fetter.

FESTINATE. adj. [festinatus, Lat.] Hasty; hurried. A word not in use.

Advise the duke, where you are going, to a most festinate preparation: we are bound to the like.

FESTINATELY. adv. [from festinate.] Hastily; speedily; with speed. Not in use.

Take this key; give enlargement to the swain, and bring him festinately hither.

FESTINATION. n. f. [festinatio, Latin.] Haste; hurry.

FESTIVAL. adj. [festivus, Latin.] Pertaining to feasts; joyous.

He appeared at great tables, and festival entertainments, that he might manifest his divine charity to men.

FESTIVAL. n. f. Time of feast; anniversary day of civil or religious joy.

So tedious is this day,

As is the night before some festival,

To an impatient child that hath new robes,

And may not wear them.

Th' invited festivals with their graces blest

Their festivals.

The morning trumpets festival proclaim'd

Through each high street.

Follow, ye nymphs and shepherds all,

Come celebrate this festival,

And merrily sing, and sport, and play;

For 'tis Oriana's nuptial day.

By sacrifice of the tongues they purged away whatever they had spoken amiss during the festival.

The festival of our Lord's resurrection we have celebrated, and may now consider the chief consequence of his resurrection, a judgment to come.

FESTIVE. adj. [festivus, Latin.] Joyous; gay; befitting a feast.

The glad circle round them yield their souls

To festive mirth and wit that knows no gall.

FESTIVITY. n. f. [festivitas, Lat. from festivus.]

1. Festival; time of rejoicing.

The daughter of Jephtha came to be worshipped as a deity, and had an annual festivity observed unto her honour.

There happening a great and solemn festivity, such as the sheep-shearings used to be, David condescends to beg of a rich man some small repast.

2. Gaity; joyfulness; temper or behaviour befitting a feast.

To those persons there is no better instrument to cause the remembrance, and to endear the affection to the article, than the recommending it by festivity and joy of a holiday.

FESTUON. n. f. [feston, French.] In architecture, an ornament of carved work in the form of a wreath or garland of flowers, or leaves twisted together, thickest at the middle, and suspended by the two extremes, whence it hangs down perpendicularly.

FESTUCINE. adj. [festuca, Latin.] Straw-colour between green and yellow.

Therein may be discovered a little insect of a festucine or pale green, resembling a locust or grasshopper.

FESTUCUS. adj. [festuca, Latin.] Formed of straw.

We speak of straws, or festucous divisions, lightly drawn over with oil.

To FET. v. a. To fetch; to go and bring.

Get home with thy fewel, made ready to fet,

The sooner the easier carriage to get.

He in a chair was fet,

Tossing and turning them withouten end;

But for he was unable them to fet,

A little boy did on him still attend.

And they fet forth Urijah out of Egypt to Jehoikim, who flew him with the sword.

F. T. n. f. [I suppose from fait, French, a part or portion]

A piece.

The bottom clear,

Now laid with many a fet

To FETCH. v. a. preter. fet had, anciently fet, which is raised came from To fet [feccan, fecran, Saxon.]

1. To go and bring.

They have devis'd a mean

How he her chamber-window will ascend,

And with a corded ladder fetch her down.

We will take men to fetch victuals for the people.

Go to the flock, and fetch me from thence two kids.

The feat of empire, where the Irish come,

And the unwilling Scotch, to fet b their doom.

Draw forth the monst'ers of th' abyss profound,

Or fet b th' aerial eagle to the ground.

2. To derive; to draw.

On, you noblest English,

Whose blood is fetched from fathers of war-proof.

3. To strike at a distance.

The conditions of weapons, and their improvement, are the fetching afar off; for that outruns the danger, as it is seen in ordnance and muskets.

4. To bring to any state by some powerful operation.

In smells we see their great and sudden effect in fetching men again, when they swoon.

At Rome any of those arts immediately thrives, under the encouragement of the prince, as may be fetch up to its perfection in ten or a dozen years, which is the work of an age or two in other countries.

5. To draw within any confinement or prohibition.

General terms may sufficiently convey to the people what our intentions are, and yet not fetch us within the compass of the ordinance.

6. To produce by some kind of force.

I these ways, if there were any secret excellence among them, would fetch it out, and give it fair opportunity to advance itself by.

An human soul without education is like marble in the quarry, which shews none of its beauties till the fall of the polisher fetches out the colours.

7. To perform any excursion.

I'll fetch a turn about the garden, pining

The pangs of barr'd affections; though the king

Hath charg'd you should not speak together.

When evening grey doth rise, I fetch my sound

Over the mount, and all this hollow ground.

To come to that place they must fetch a compass three miles on the right hand through a forest.

8. To perform with suddenness or violence.

Note a wild and wanton herd,

Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,

Fetching mad bounds, bellowing and neighing loud.

The fox fetches a hundred and a hundred leaps at a delicious cluster of grapes.

Talk to her of an unfortunate young lady that lost her beauty by the fall-mox, she fetches a deep sigh.

9. To reach; to arrive at; to come to.

Mean time flew our ships, and freight we fetch

The tyrens life; a spleenless life so sweet

Her wings to waft us, and so urg'd our keel.

It needs not thy belief,

If earth, industrious of herself, fetch day

Travelling East; and with her part averfe

From the sun's beam, meet night; her other part

Still luminous by his ray.

The hare laid himself down, and took a nap; for, says he,

I can fet b up the tortoise when I please.

10. To obtain as its price.

During such a state, silver in the coin will never fet b as much as the silver in bullion.

To FETCH. v. n. To move with a quick return.

Like a shifted wind unto a sail,

It makes the course of thoughts to fetch about.

FETCH. n. f. [from the verb.] A stratagem by which any thing is indirectly performed; by which one thing seems attended and another is done; a trick; an artifice.

An envious neighbour is easy to find,

His cumbersome fetches are seldom behind:

His fet b is to flatter, to get what he can;

His purpose once gotten, a pin for thee than.

It is a fet b of wit;

You laying these slight follies on my son,

As 'twere a thing a little foil'd i' th' working.

But Sidrophel, as full of tricks

Straight cast about to over-reach

Th' unwary conspirator with a fetch.

With this fetch he laughs at the trick he hath play'd me.

The fox had a fet b in't.

From these instances and fet b

Thou mak'st of horses, clocks and watches,

1

Quoth

Quoth Mat, thou seem'st to mean

That Alma is a mecer machine.

Prior.

FETCHER. n. f. [from fetch.] One that fetches any thing.

FETID. adj. [fetidi, Latin; fetide, Fr.] Stinking; rancid; having a smell strong and offensive.

Most putrefactions are of an odious smell; for they smell either fetid or mouldy.

Bacon.

In the most severe orders of the church of Rome, those who practise abstinence, feel after it fetid hot eruptions.

Arbutnot.

Plague, fiercest child of Nemesis divine,

Descends from Ethiopia's poison'd woods,

From fluted Cairo's filth and fetid fields.

Thomson.

FETIDNESS. n. f. [from fetid.] The quality of stinking.

FETLOCK. n. f. [fet and lock.] A tuft of hair as big as the hair of the mane, that grows behind the pastern-joint of many horses: horses of a low size have scarce any such tuft.

Farrers D.D.

Their wounded steeds

Fret fetlock deep in gore, and with wild rage

Yerk out their armed heels at their dead masters.

Shakespeare.

White were the fetlocks of his feet before,

And on his front a snowy star he bore.

Dryden.

FETTER. n. f. [fetter, Latin.] A flink; a ftench; a strong and offensive smell.

The fetter may discover itself by sweat and humour.

Brown.

When the symptoms are attended with a fetter of any kind, such a disease will be cured by acceffent fubftances, and none better than whey.

Arbutnot.

FETTER. n. f. It is commonly used in the plural, fettters.

[from fet & petere, Saxon.] Chains for the feet; chains by which walking is hindered.

Dulcine unto foot, is as fettters on the feet, and like manacles on the right hand.

Ecclij.

Drawing after me the chains and fettters whereunto I have been thirteen years tied, I have by other means errors failed.

Raleigh.

Passion's too fierce to be in fettters bound,

And nature flies him like enchantment ground.

Dryden.

The wretch in double fettters bound,

Your potent mercy may release.

Prior.

I thought her pride

Had broke your fettters, and assur'd your freedom.

A. Phil.

FETTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind; to enchain; to shackle; to tie.

Neither her great worthiness, nor his own suffering for her, could fetter his kindness.

Simsy.

My confidence! thou art fetter'd

More than my thanks and wriths.

Shakespeare.

Fetter strong madness in a silken thread;

Charm aches with air, and agony with words.

Shakespeare.

Doth a master chide his servant because he doth not come,

yet knows that the servant is chained and fettered, so as he cannot move?

Bramhall.

A chain which man to fetter man has made;

By artifice imposed, by fear obey'd.

Prior.

FETTER. v. n. [A cant word from feel.] To do trifling business; to play the hands without labour.

When your matter is most busy in company, come in and pretend to fetter about the room; and if he chides, say you thought he hung the bell.

Swift.

FETUS. n. f. [fetus, Latin.] Any animal in embryo; any thing yet in the womb; any thing unborn.

Nor are we at leisure to examine that paradox of Hippocrates, which some learned physicians have of late revived, that the fetus respire in the womb.

Boyle.

FETTER. n. f. [feud, enmity, Saxon.] Quarrel; contention; opposition; war.

Though men would find such mortal feuds

In fluting of their publick goods,

Hudibras.

In former ages it was a constant policy of France to raise and cherish intestine feuds and discords in the isle of Great Britain.

Addison.

Scythia mourns

Our guilty wars, and earth's remotest regions

Lie half unpeopled by the feuds of Rome.

Addison.

FUDAL. adj. [feudalis, low Latin.] Pertaining to fees, fens, or tenures by which lands are held of a superior lord.

FUDAL. n. f. A dependance; something held by tenure; a fee; a feu.

Wales, that was not always the feudal territory of England, having been governed by a prince of their own, had laws utterly strange to the laws of England.

Hale.

FUDATORY. n. f. [from feud.] One who holds not in chief, but by some conditional tenure from a superior.

The duke of Parma was reasonably well tempted to be true to that enterprise, by no less promise than to be made a feudatory, or beneficiary king of England, under the feignory in chief of the pope, and the protection of the king of Spain.

Bacon.

FEVER. n. f. [fevere, French; febris, Latin.] A disease in which the body is violently heated, and the pulse quickened, or in which heat and cold prevail by turns. It is sometimes continual, sometimes intermittent.

No LIV.

Think'st thou the fiery fever will go out

With titles blown from adulation?

Will it give place to flexure and low bending?

Shakspeare.

Duncan is in his grave;

After life's fitful fever he sleeps well.

Shakspeare.

Should not a ling'ring fever be remov'd,

Because it long has rag'd within my blood?

Dryden.

He had never dream'd in his life, till he had the fever he was then newly recovered of.

Locke.

To FEVER. v. a. [from the noun.] To put into a fever.

The white hand of a lady fever thee!

Shake to look on't.

Shakspeare.

FEVERET. n. f. [from fever.] A slight fever; febricula.

A light feveret, or an old quartan ague, is not a sufficient excuse for non-appearance.

Ayliffe.

FEVEREW. n. f. [februi and fuge, Latin.]

It has a fibrore root: the leaves are conjugated, and divided into many segments: the cup of the flower is squamose and hemispherical: the flowers grow in an umbel upon the top of the stalks, and the rays of the flower are generally white.

The species are nine; but the first, called common feverew, is the sort used in medicine, and is found wild in many parts of England; but is, however, cultivated in medicinal gardens.

Miller.

FEVERISH. adj. [from fever.]

1. Troubled with a fever.

To other climates beasts and birds retire,

And feverish nature burns in her own fire.

Crauch.

When an animal that gives flocks turns feverish, that is, its juices more alkaline, the milk turns from its native genuine whiteness to yellow.

A. L. L.

2. Tending to a fever.

A feverish disorder disabled me.

Swift.

3. Uncertain; inconstant; now hot, now cold.

We toils and turn about our feverish will,

When all our ease must come by lying still;

For all the happiness mankind can gain

Is not in pleasure, but in rest from pain.

Dryden.

4. Hot; burning.

And now four days the sun had seen our woe,

Four nights the moon beeld th' inefficient fire;

It seem'd as if the stars more tickly role,

And farther from the feverish north retire

Dryden.

FEVERISHNESS. n. f. [from feverish.] A slight disorder of the seventh kind.

FEVEROUS. adj. [fevreux, French; from fever.]

1. Troubled with a fever or ague.

Thou mad'st thine enemies shake, as if the world

Were feverous; and did tremble.

Shakspeare.

2. Having the nature of a fever.

All feverous kinds,

Convulsions, epilepsies, fierce catarrhs.

Milton.

3. Having a tendency to produce fevers.

It hath been noted by the ancients, that southern winds, blowing much, with-ut-rain, do cause a feverous disposition of the year; but with rain, not

Bacon.

FEVERY. adj. [from fever.] Disaffected with a fever.

O Rome, thy head

Is d'own'd in sleep, and all thy body fevery.

Ben. Johnson.

FEUILLAGE. n. f. [French.] A bunch or row of leaves.

I have done Homer's head; and I include the outline, that you may determine whether you would have it so large, or reduced to make room for feuillage or laurel round the oval.

Jerron in Pope.

FEUILLE-MORT. n. f. [French.] The colour of a faded leaf, corrupted commonly to thimot.

FLUTTERER. n. f. A dogkeeper: perhaps the cleaner of the kennel.

FEW. adj. [yew, yepa, Saxon; few, Danish.]

1. Not many; not in a great number.

We are left but few of many.

Jeremiah.

So much the thirst of honour fires the blood;

So many would be great, so few be good;

For who would vie for her self regard,

Or wed without the portion of reward?

Dryden.

On winter seas we fewer storm: behold,

Than foul diseases that infect the fold.

Dryden.

Men have fewer or more simple ideas from without, according as the objects they converse with afford greater or less variety.

Locke.

The fewer still you name, you wound the more;

Bond is but one, but Harpax is a score.

Pope.

Party is the madness of many, for the gain of a few.

The imagination of a poet is a thing so nice and delicate, that it is no easy matter to find out images capable of giving pleasure to one of the few who, in any age, have come up to that character.

Beckley.

2. Sometimes, elliptically, not many words.

To answer both allegations at once, the very substance of that they contain is in few but this.

Locke.

9 C

- So having said, he thus to Eve in few:
 Say, woman, what is this which thou hast done? Milton.
 Thus Jupiter in few unfold the charge. Dryden.
 The firm resolve I here in few disclose. Pope.
- FÉWEL. n. f. [few, French.] Combustible matter; materials for keeping fire: as firewood, coal.
 If a spark of error have thus far prevailed, falling even where the wood was green, and farthest off from any inclination unto furious attempts, must not the peril thereof be greater in men, whose minds are as dry fewel, apt beforehand unto tumults, seditions, and broils? Hucker.
 Other may give the fewel of the fire;
 But they the breath, that makes the flame, inspire. Danham.
 A known quantity of fewel, all kindled at once, will cause water to boil, which being lighted gradually will never be able to do it. Bentley.
- TO FÉWEL. v. n. [from the noun.] To feed with fewel.
 Never, alas! the dreadful name,
 That fewels the infernal flame. Cowley.
- FÉWNESS. n. f. [from few.]
 1. Paucity; smallness of number.
 'I hebe, by reason of their fewness, I could not distinguish from the numbers of the rest with whom they are embodied. Dryden.
 2. Paucity of words; brevity; conciseness. Shakespeare.
Fewness and truth, 'tis thus.
- TO FEY. v. a. [veighen, Dutch.] To cleanse a ditch of mud.
 Such muddy deep ditches and pits in the field,
 That all a dry summer no water will yield,
 By feying and casting that mud upon heaps,
 Commodities many the husbandman reaps. Tusser.
- FIB. n. f. [A cant word among children.] A lie; a falsehood.
 Destroy his fib or sophistry, in vain,
 The creature's at his dirty work again. Pope.
 I so often lie.
- Scarce Harvey's self has told more *fib*s than I. Pope.
- FI. v. n. [from the noun.] To lie; to tell lies; to speak falsely.
 If you have any particular mark, whereby one may know when you fi, and when you speak truth, you had best tell me. Arbutnot.
- FIBER. n. f. [from fib.] A teller of *fib*s.
- FIBRE. n. f. [fière, French; fibra, Latin.] A small thread or string; the first constituent parts of bodies.
 Now sliding streams the thrifty plants renew,
 And feed their fibres with reviving dew. Pope.
 2. A *fi*bre, in physics, is an animal thread, of which there are different kinds: some are soft, flexible, and a little elastic; and these are either hollow, like small pipes, or spongy and full of little cells, as the nervous and fleshy fibres: others are more solid, flexile, and with a strong elasticity or spring, as the membranous and cartilaginous fibres: and a third sort are hard and flexible, as the fibres of the bones. Now of all those some are very sensible, and others destitute of all sense: some so very small as not to be easily perceived; and others, on the contrary, so big as to be plainly seen; and most of them, when examined with a microscope, appear to be composed of still smaller fibres: these fibres first constitute the substance of the bones, cartilages, ligaments, membranes, nerves, veins, arteries, and muscles. And again, by the various texture and different combination of some or all of those parts, the more compound organs are framed; such as the lungs, stomach, liver, legs, and arms, the sum of all which make up the body. Quincy.
 My heart sinks in me while I hear him speak,
 And every slacken'd *fi*bre drops its hold,
 Like nature letting down the springs of life:
 The name of father awes me still. Dryden.
- FIBRIL. n. f. [fièvre, French.] A small fibre or string.
 The muscles consist of a number of fibres, and each fibre of an incredible number of little *fibri*ls bound together, and divided into little cells. Cheyne.
- FIBROUS. adj. [fibrosus, French; from fibra.] Composed of fibres or lamina.
 The difference between bodies fibrous and bodies viscous is plain; for all wool and tow, and cotton and silk, have a greediness of moisture. Bacon.
 I saw Petrus's arms employ'd around
 A well-grown oak, to root it from the ground;
 This way and that he wrench'd the fibrous bands,
 The trunk was like a sapling in his hands. Dryden.
 The fibres and solid parts of plants pass unaltered through the intestines. Arbutnot.
- FIBULA. n. f. [Latin.] The outer and lesser bone of the leg, much smaller than the tibia: it lies on the outside of the leg; and its upper end, which is not so high as the knee, receives the lateral knob of the upper end of the tibia into a small sinus, which it has in its inner side. Its lower end is received into the small sinus of the tibia, and then it extends into a large process, which forms the outer ankle. Quincy.
- FICKLE. adj. [picol, Saxon.]
 1. Changeable; unconstant; irresolute; wavering; unsteady; mutable; changeful; without steady adherence.

- Remember where we are,
 In France amongst a fickle wavering nation. Shakespeare.
 A slave, whose easy borrow'd pride
 Dwells in the fickle grace of her he follows. Shakespeare.
 Or likeliest hovering dreams,
 The fickle pensioners of Morpheus's train.
 They know how fickle common lovers are;
 Their oaths and vows are cautiously believ'd;
 For few there are but have been once deceiv'd. Dryden.
 We in vain the fickle lex pursue,
 Who change the constant lover for the new. Prior.
 2. Not fixed; subject to vicissitude.
 He would be loth
 Us to abolish; left the adversary
 Triumph, and say, fickle their state, whom God
 Most favours! Milton.
- FICKLENESS. n. f. [from fickle.] Inconstancy; uncertainty; unsteadiness.
 Neither her great worthiness, nor his own suffering for her, could fether his fickleness; but, before his marriage-day, he had taken to wife that Bascha of whom she complained. Sidney.
 Beware of fraud, beware of fickleness,
 In choice and change of thy dear loved dame. Spenser.
 I am a soldier, and unapt to weep,
 Or to exclaim on fortune's fickleness. Shakespeare.
 Instability of temper ought to be checked, when it disposes men to wander from one scheme of government to another, since such a fickleness cannot but be attended with fatal consequences. Adams.
 Whether out of fickleness or design I can't tell, I found that what the lido one day the disliked another. Adams.
- FICKLY. adj. [from fickle.] Without certainty or stability.
 Do not now,
 Like a young wasteful heir, mortgage the hopes
 Of godlike majesty on bankrupt terms,
 To raise a present pow'r that's fickly held
 By the frail tenure of the people's will. Saturn.
- FICO. n. f. [Italian.] An act of contempt done with the fingers, expressing a fig for you.
 Having once recovered his fortress, he then gives the fi to all that his adversaries can by siege, force, or famine attempt against him. Carver.
- FICTILE. adj. [fictilis, Latin.] Moulded into form; manufactured by the potter.
 The cause of fragility is an impotency to be extended; and therefore stone is more fragile than metal, and so fictile earth is more fragile than crude earth. Bacon.
- FICTION. n. f. [fictio, Latin; ficción, French.]
 1. The act of feigning or inventing.
 If the presence of God in the image, by a mere fictio of the mind, be a sufficient ground to worship that image, is not God's real presence in every creature a far better ground to worship it? Stillingfleet.
Fiction is of the essence of poetry, as well as of painting: there is a resemblance in one of human bodies, things, and actions, which are not real; and in the other of a true story by a fictio. Dryden.
 2. The thing feigned or invented.
 If through mine ears pierce any consolations,
 By wise discourse, sweet tunes, or poets fictions;
 If ought I cease these hideous exclamations,
 While that my soul, she, she, lives in affliction. Sidney.
 So also was the fictio of those golden apples kept by a dragon, taken from the serpent, which tempted Evah. Raleigh.
 3. A falsehood; a lie.
- FICTITIOUS. adj. [fictivus, Latin.] Fictitious; imaginary; invented. A word coined by Prior.
 With fancy's rules and arbitrary laws
 Matter and motion man restrains,
 And study'd lines and fictitious circles draws. Prior.
- FICTITIOUS. adj. [fictivus, Latin.]
 1. Counterfeit; false; not genuine.
 Draw him strictly so,
 That all who view the piece may know
 He needs no trappings of fictitious fame. Dryden.
 2. Feigned; imaginary.
 The human persons are as fictitious as the airy ones; and Belinda resembles you in nothing but in beauty. Pope.
 3. Not real; not true.
 Milton, sensible of this defect in the subject of his poem, brought into it two characters of a shadowy and fictitious nature, in the persons of sin and death, by which means he has interwoven in his fable a very beautiful allegory. Adams.
- FICTITIOUSLY. adv. [from fictivus.] Falsely; counterfeitedly.
 These pieces are fictitiously set down, and have no copy in nature. Brown.
- FID. n. f. [fitta, Italian.] A pointed iron with which women untwist their cords. Sidney.
- FIDDLE. n. f. [fiðele, Saxon; viðel, Dutch; fid, German; fidicula, Latin; fiðul, Erse.] A stringed instrument of music; a violin. Id.

In trials of musical skill the judges did not crown the fiddle, but the performer.

The adventure of the bear and fiddle

Is sung; but breaks off in the middle.

Hudibras.

She tried the fiddle all over, by drawing the bow over every part of the strings; but could not, for her heart, find whereabout the tune lay.

Adisson.

To FIDDLE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To play upon a fiddle.

Themistocles being desired at a feast to touch a lute, he said he could not fiddle, but he could make a small town a great city.

Bacon.

Others import yet nobler arts from France,

Teach kings to fiddle, and make senators dance.

Pope.

2. To trifle; to shift the hands often, and do nothing, like a fellow that plays upon a fiddle.

A cunning fellow observed, that old Lewis had stole away part of the map, and saw him fiddling and turning the map, trying to join the two pieces together.

Arbutnot.

Good cooks cannot abide what they justly call fiddling work, where abundance of time is spent, and little done.

Swift.

FIDDLEFADDLE. n. f. [A cant word.] Trifles.

She said that her grandfather had a horse shot at Edgehill, and her uncle was at the siege of Buda; with abundance of fiddlefaddle of the same nature.

Spettator.

FIDDLEFADDLE. adj. Trifling; giving trouble, or making a bubble about nothing.

She was a troublesome fiddlefaddle old woman, and so ceremonious that there was no bearing of her.

Arbutnot.

FIDDLER. n. f. [from fiddle.] A musician; one that plays upon the fiddle.

Let no fawcy fiddler presume to intrude,

Unless he is sent for to vary our bliss.

Ben. Johnson.

Nero put the fiddlers to death for being more skilful in the trade than he was.

Taylor.

These will appear such chits in story,

'Twill turn all politics to jest,

To be repeated like John Dory,

Dryden.

When fiddlers sing at feasts.

When mirth delights in her spinnet,

Swift.

A fiddler may a fortune get.

FIDDLYSTICK. n. f. [fiddle and stick.] The bow and hair which a fiddler draws over the strings of a fiddle.

His grizzly beard was long and thick,

Hudibras.

With which he strung his fiddlestick.

FIDDLYSTRING. n. f. [fiddle and string.] The string of a fiddle; that which makes the noise.

A fiddlestring, moistened with water, will sink a note in a little time, and consequently must be relaxed or lengthened one sixteenth.

Arbutnot.

FIDELITY. n. f. [fideltas, Latin; fideli, French.]

1. Honesty; veracity.

The church, by her publick reading of the book of God, preached only as a witness; now the principal thing required in a witness is fideli.

Hacker.

2. Faithful adherence.

They mistake credulity for fideli.

Clarke.

To FIDGET. } v. n. [A cant word.] To move nimbly and

To FIDGET. } irregularly. It implies in Scotland agitation.

Tim, thou'rt the Punch to stir up trouble in;

You wriggle, fidger, and make a rout,

Put all your brother puppets out;

Run on in a perpetual round;

Swift.

To tease, perplex, disturb, confound.

FIDUCIAL. adj. [fiducia, Latin.] Confident; undoubting.

Faith is cordial, and such as God will accept of, when it affords fiducial reliance on the promises, and obediential submission to the commands.

Hammond.

FIDUCIARY. n. f. [fiduciarius, Latin.]

1. One who holds any thing in trust.

2. One who depends on faith without works.

The second obstructive is that of the fiduciary, that faith is the only instrument of his justification; and excludes good works from contributing any thing toward it.

Hammond.

FIDUCIARY. adj.

1. Confident; steady; undoubting; untouched with doubt. That faith, which is required of us, is then perfect, when it produces in us a fiducial assent to whatever the gospel has revealed.

Wate.

2. Not to be doubted.

Elaiana can rely no where upon mere love and fiducial obedience, unless at her own home, where she is exemplarily loyal to herself in a high exact obedience.

Hawd.

FIEF. n. f. [fief, French.] A fee; a manor; a possession held by some tenure of a superiour.

To the next realm the stretch'd her sway,

For painture near adjoining lay,

A plentiful province and alluring prey;

A chamber of dependencies was fram'd,

And the whole fief, in right of poetry, the claim'd.

Dryden.

As they were honoured by great privileges, so their lands were in the nature of fiefs, for which the possessors were obliged to do personal service at fea.

Arbutnot.

FIELD. n. f. [feld, Saxon; feld, German; veld, Dutch.]

1. Ground not inhabited, not built on.

Live with me, and be my love,

And we will all the pleasure prove,

That hills and vallies, dale and field,

And all the craggy mountains yield.

Releigh.

By the civil law the corps of persons deceased were buried but of the city in the fields.

Ayiffe.

2. Ground not enclosed.

Field lands are not exempted from mildews, nor yet from smut, where it is more than in inclosed lands.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

3. Cultivated tract of ground.

Or great Osiris, who first taught the swain

In Pharian fields to sow the golden grain.

Pope.

4. The open country: opposed to quarters.

Since his majesty went into the field,

I have seen her rise from her bed.

Shakespeare.

5. The ground of battle.

What though the field be loft,

Milton.

When a man is in the field, a moderate skill in fencing rather exposes him to the sword of his enemy than secures him from it.

Lake.

6. A battle; a campaign; the action of an army while it keeps the field.

You maintain several saitions;

And whilst a field should be dispatch'd and fought,

You are disputing of your general.

Shakespeare.

7. A wide expanse.

The god a clearer space for heav'n design'd;

Where fields of light and liquid ether flow,

Purg'd from the pondrous dregs of earth below.

Dryden.

Ask of yonder ardent field above,

Why Jove's fatalities are less than Jove.

Pope.

8. Space; compass; extent.

The ill-natured man gives himself a large field to expatiate in: he exposes failings in human nature

I should enter upon a field too wide, and too much beaten,

if I should display all the advantages of peace.

Smairidge.

Who can this field of miracies survey;

And not with Gales all in rapture say,

Behold a God, above space on which figures are drawn.

Blair's Mosa.

9. The ground or blank space on which figures are drawn. Let the field or ground of the picture be clean, light, and well united with colour.

Dryden.

10. [In heraldry.] The surface of a shield.

FIELDED. adj. [from field.] Being in field of battle.

Now, Mars, I pray thee, make us quick in work;

That we with smoking sword, may march from hence,

To help our fielded friends.

Shakespeare.

FIELD-BASE. n. f. [field and base.] A plant with a lobated flower, consisting of one leaf, whose upper lip is upright, roundish, and generally split in two; but the beard, or under lip, is divided into three segments: these flowers are disposed in whorles round the stalks, and are succeeded by oblong seeds.

Willer.

FIELDBED. n. f. [field and bed.] A bed contrived to be set up easily in the field.

Romeo, good-night; I'll to my trucklebed,

This fielded is too cold for me to sleep.

Shakespeare.

FIELDFARE. n. f. [feld and farian, Saxon, to wander in the fields.] A bird.

Winter birds, as woodcocks and fieldfares, if they come early out of the northern countries, with us shew cold winters.

Bacon.

FIELDMARSHAL. n. f. [feld and marshal.] Commander of an army in the field.

FIELDMOUSE. n. f. [field and mouse.] A mouse that burrows in banks, and makes her house with various apartments.

The fieldmouse builds her garner under ground.

Dryden.

Fieldmice are apt to gnaw their roots, and kill them in hard winters.

Mortimer.

FIELDOFFICER. n. f. [field and officer.] An officer whose command in the field extends to a whole regiment: as the colonel, lieutenant-colonel, and major.

FIELDPICCE. n. f. [field and picce.] Small cannon used in battles, but not in sieges.

The balla planting his fieldpieces upon the hills on the north side, did from thence grievously annoy the defendants.

Kneller.

FIEND. n. f. [fiend, fjend, Saxon, a foe]

1. An enemy; the great enemy of mankind; Satan; the devil. Tom is followed by the foul fiend.

Shakespeare.

2. Any infernal being.

What now, had I a body again, I could,

Coming from hell; what fiend would with should be,

And Hannibal could not have with'd to see.

Ben. Johnson's Catiline.

The hell-hounds, as ungorg'd with flesh and blood,

Puffe their prey, and seek their wanted food;

The fiend remounts his course.

Dryden.

O woman!

FIG

what have we been fighting for all this while? The answer is ready: we have been fighting for the ruin of the publick interest, and the advancement of a private.

- For her concordance nations fighted, and kings were slain,
Troy was o'erthrown, and a whole empire fell.
2. To combat; to duel; to contend in single fight.
One shall undertake to fight against another.

The poor wren,
The most diminutive of birds, will fight,
The young ones in her nest, against the owl.
3. To act as a soldier in any case.

- Richard, that robb'd the lion of his heart,
And fighted the holy wars in Palestine,
By this brave duke came early to his grave.
Greatly unfortunate, he fighted the cause
Of honour, virtue, liberty and Rome.
4. It has with before the person opposed.
5. To contend.

The hot and cold, the dry and humid fight.
To FIGHT. v. a. To war against; to combat against.
Himself alone, an equal match he boasts.
To fight the Phrygian and th' Aulonian hosts.

FIGHT. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Battle.
2. Combat; duel.

Herilus in single fight I flew,
Whom with three lives Eronia did endure;
And thrice I sent him to the Stygian shore,
'Till the last ebbling foul return'd no more.

3. Something to fence the combatants in ships.
FIGHTER. n. f. [from fight.] Warrior; duellist.
I will return again into the house, and desire some conduct of the lady: I am no fighter.

O, 'tis the coldest youth upon a charge,
The most deliberate fighter!

FIGHTING. participial adj. [from fight.]
1. Qualified for war; fit for battle.

An host of fighting men went out to war by bands.
2. Occupied by war; being the scene of war.

In fighting fields, as far the spear I throw
As flus the arrow from the well-drawn bow.

FIGHTMENT. n. f. [from fightment, Latin.] An invention; a fiction; the idea feigned.

Upon the like grounds was raised the fightment of Briareus, who, dwelling in a city called Hecatonchiria, the fancies of those times assigned him in an hundred hands.
The most frightful passages, probably so strange as to be hardly credible; it carried rather an appearance of fightment and invention, in those that handed down the memory of it, than of truth and reality.

FIGPECKER. n. f. [fig and peck.] A bird.

FIGULATE. adj. [from figuati, Latin.] Made of potters clay.

FIGURABLE. adj. [from figura, Latin.] Capable of being brought to certain form, and retained in it. Thus lead is figurable, but not water.

The differences of imprefible and not imprefible, figurable and not figurable, scissible and not scissible, are plebeian notions.

FIGURABILITY. n. f. [from figurable.] The quality of being capable of a certain and stable form.

FIGURAL. adj. [from figura.]
1. Represented by delineation.

Incongruities have been committed by geographers in the figural resemblances of several regions.

2. FIGURAL Numbers. Such numbers as do or may represent some geometrical figure, in relation to which they are always considered, and are either linear, superficial, or solid.

FIGURATE. adj. [from figura, Latin.]
1. Of a certain and determinate form.

Plants are all figurate and determinate, which inanimate bodies are not; for look how far the spirit is able to spread and continue itself, so far goeth the shape or figure, and then is determined.

2. Refembling any thing of a determinate form: as, figurate stones retaining the forms of shells in which they were formed by the deluge.

3. FIGURATE Counterpoint. [In musick.] That wherein there is a mixture of discords along with the concords.

5. FIGURATE Descant. [In musick.] That wherein discords are concerned, as well, though not so much, as concords; and may well be termed the ornament or rhetorical part of musick, in regard that in this are introduced all the varieties of points, figures, syncopes, diversities of measures, and whatever else is capable of adorning the composition.

FIGURATION. n. f. [from figura, Latin.]
1. Determination to a certain form.

Neither doth the wind, as far as it carrieth a voice, with motion thereof confound any of the delicate and articulate figurations of the air in variety of words.

2. The act of giving a certain form.

N. LV.

If motion be in a certain order, there followeth vivification and figuration in living creatures perfect.

FIGURATIVE. adj. [from figurativus, fr. from figura, Latin.]
1. Representing something else; typical; representative.

This, they will say, was figurative, and served by God's appointment but for a time, to shadow out the true everlasting glory of a more divine sanctity; wherein Christ being long since entered, it seemeth that all these curious exornations should rather cease.

2. Changed by rhetorical figures from the primitive meaning;
not literal.

How often have we been railed at for understanding words in a figurative sense, which cannot be literally understood without overthrowing the plainest evidence of sense and reason.

This is a figurative expression, where the words are used in a different sense from what they signify in their first ordinary intention.

3. Full of figures; full of rhetorical exornations; full of changes from the original sense.

Sublime subjects ought to be adorned with the sublime and with the most figurative expressions.

FIGURATIVELY. adv. [from figurative.] By a figure; in a sense different from that which words originally imply; not literally.

The custom of the apostle is figuratively to transfer to himself, in the first person, what belongs to others.

The words are different, but the sense is still the same; for therein are figuratively intended Uziah and Ezechias.

Satyr is a kind of poetry in which human vices are reprehended, partly dramatically, partly simply; but, for the most part, figuratively and occulently.

1. The form of any thing as terminated by the outline.

Flowers have all exquisite figures, and the flower numbers are chiefly five and four; as in primroses, briar-roses, single muskroses, single pinks and gillflowers, &c. which have five leaves; lilies, flower-de-luces, borage, buglaze, &c. which have four leaves.

Men find green clay that is soft as long as it is in the water, so that one may print on it all kind of figures, and give it what shape one pleases.

Figures are properly modifications of bodies; for pure space is not any where terminated, nor can be; whether there be or be not body in it, it is uniformly continued.

2. Shape; form; semblance.

He hath borne himself beyond the promise of his age, doing in the figure of a lamb the feats of a lion.

3. Person; external form; appearance graceful or inelegant, mean or grand.

The blue German shall the Tigris drink,
E'er I, forsaking gratitude and truth,
Forget the figure of that godlike youth.

I was charmed with the gracefulness of his figure and delivery, as well as with his discourses.

A good figure, or person, in man or woman, gives credit at first sight to the choice of either.

4. Distinguished appearance; eminence; remarkable character.

While fortune favour'd, while his arm support
The cause, and rul'd the counsels of the court,
I made some figure there; nor was my name
Obscure, nor I without my share of fame.

The speech, I believe, was not so much designed by the knight to inform the court, as to give him a figure in my eye, and keep up his credit in the country.

Not a woman shall be unexplained that makes a figure either as a maid, a wife, or a widow.

Whether or no they have done well to set you up for making another kind of figure, time will witness.

Many princes made very ill figures upon the throne, who before were the favourites of the people.

5. A statue; an image; something formed in resemblance of somewhat else.

The several statues, which seemed at a distance to be made of the whitest marble, were nothing else but so many figures in snow.

6. Representations in painting; persons exhibited in colours.

In the principal figures of a picture the painter is to employ the fineness of his art; for in them consists the principal beauty of his work.

My favourite books and pictures sell;
Kindly throw in a little figure,
And set the price upon the bigger.

7. Arrangement; disposition; modification.

The figure of a syllogism is the proper disposition of the middle term with the parts of the question.

8. A character denoting a number.

Hearts, tongues, figures, scribes, bards, poets cannot Think, speak, cast, write, sing, number
His love to Anthony.

He that seeketh to be eminent amongst able men, hath a great

great task; but that is ever good for the publick: but he that plots to be the only figure among cyphers, is the decay of a whole age.

As in accounts cyphers and figures pass for real sums, so in human affairs words pass for things themselves.

9. The horoscope; the diagram of the aspects of the astrological houses.

We do not know what's brought to pass under the profession of fortunetelling: the works by charms, by spells, by the figure, and dawbry beyond our element.

He fet a figure to discover

If you were fled to Rye or Dover.

Figure flingers and star-gazers pretend to foretell the fortunes of kingdoms, and have no foresight in what concerns themselves.

10. [In theology.] Type representative.

Who was the figure of him that is to come.

11. [In rhetoric.] Any mode of speaking in which words are detorted from their literal and primitive sense. In strict acceptation, the change of a word is a trope, and any affection of a sentence a figure; but they are generally confounded by the exactest writers.

Silken terms precise,

Three pil'd hyperboles, spruce affectation,

Figures pedantical, these fummer castles,

Have blown me full of maggot ostentation.

Here is a strange figure invented against the plain and natural sense of the words; for by praying to bestow, must be understood only praying to pray.

They have been taught rhetoric, but yet never taught to express themselves in the language they are always to use; as if the names of the figures that embellish the discourse of those, who understood the art of speaking, were the very art and skill of speaking well.

12. [In grammar.] Any deviation from the rules of analogy or syntax.

To FIGURE. v. a. [figura, Latin.]

1. To form into any determinate shape.

Trees and herbs, in the growing forth of their boughs and branches, are not figured, and keep no order.

Accept this goblet, rough with figur'd gold.

2. To show by a corporeal resemblance: as in picture or statuary.

Arachne figur'd how Jove did abuse

Europa like a bull, and on his back

Her through the sea did bear; so lively seen,

That it true sea, and true bull ye would ween.

Now marks the course of rolling orbs on high,

O'er figur'd worlds now travels with his eye.

3. To cover or adorn with figures.

I'll give my jewels for a set of beads,

My gorgeous palace for a hermitage,

My gay apparel for an almsman's gown,

My figur'd goblets for a dish of wood.

4. To diversify; to variegate with adventitious forms or matter.

But this effusion of such manly drops,

Startles mine eyes, and makes me more amaz'd

Than had I seen the vaulty top of heav'n

Figur'd quite o'er with burning meteors.

5. To represent by a typical or figurative resemblance.

When sacraments are said to be visible signs of invisible grace, we thereby conceive how grace is indeed the very end for which these heavenly mysteries were instituted; and the matter whereof they consist is such as signifieth, figureth, and representeth their end.

There is a history in all mens lives;

Figuring the nature of the times deceased.

Marriage rings are not of this stuff:

Oh! why should ought less precious or less tough

The emperor appears as a rising sun, and holds a globe in his hand to figure out the earth that is enlightened and actuated by his beams.

6. To image in the mind.

None that feels sensibly the decays of age, and his life wearing off, can figure to himself those imaginary charms in riches and praise, that men are apt to do in the warmth of their blood.

If love, alas! be pain, the pain I bear

No thought can figure, and no tongue declare.

7. To prefigure; to foreshow.

Three glorious suns, each one a perfect fun,

In this the heaven figures some event.

8. To form figuratively; to use in a sense not literal.

Figured and metaphorical expressions do well to illustrate more abstruse and unfamiliar ideas, which the mind is not yet thoroughly accustomed to.

Quacks, figure-flingers, pettifoggers, and republican plotters cannot well live without it.

FIL

FRGWORT. n. f. [fig and wort] A plant.

It hath an anomalous flower, consisting of one leaf, gaping at both sides, and generally globular, cut as it were into two lips, under the upper one of which are two small leaves. Mill. FILA'CEOUS. adj. [from filum, Lat.] Consisting of threads; composed of threads.

They make cables of the bark of lime-trees: it is the fluke that maketh the filaceus matter common, and sometimes the down that groweth above.

FILACER. n. f. [filarius, low Lat. filum.] An officer in the Common Pleas, so called because he files those writs whereon he makes process. There are fourteen of them in their several divisions and counties: they make out all original process, as well real as personal and mixt.

FILAMENT. n. f. [filament, Fr. filamenta, Latin.] A slender thread; a body slender and long like a thread.

The effluvium passing out in a smaller thread, and more enlightened filament, it stirreth not the bodies interposed. Erazm. The lungs of consumptives have been consumed, nothing remaining but the ambient membrane, and a number of watered veins and filaments.

The ever-rolling orb's impulsive ray

On the next threads and filaments does bear,

Which form the springy texture of the air,

And those still strike the next, 'till to the light

The quick vibration propagates the light.

The dung of horses is nothing but the filaments of the hay, and as such combustible.

FILBERT. n. f. [This is derived by Junius and Steuier from the long beards or huffs, as corrupted from full beard, or fall of beard. It probably had its name, like many other fruits, from some one that introduced or cultivated it, and is therefore corrupted from Filbert or Filibert, the name of him who brought it hither.] A fine hazel-nut with a thin shell.

In August come fruit of all sorts; as plums, pears, apricot, barberries, filberts, muskmelons, monkfishes of all colours.

Thou hast a brain, such as it is indeed!

On what else should thy worm of fancy feed?

Yet in a filbert I have often known

Maggot survive, when all the kernel's gone.

There is also another kind, called the filbert of Constantinople; the leaves and fruit of which are bigger than either of the former: the best are those of a thin shell.

To FILCH. v. a. [A word of uncertain etymology. The French word filer, from which some derive it, is of very late production, and therefore cannot be its original.] To steal;

to take by theft; to pilfer; to pilage; to rob; to take by robbery. It is usually spoken of petty thefts.

He shall find his wealth wonderfully enlarged by keeping his cattle in inclosures, where they shall always have life being, that none are continually filched and stolen.

The champion robbeth by night,

And prowleth and filcheth by day.

Who steals my purse, steals trash; 'tis something nothing;

'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands;

But he that filches from me my good name,

Robs me of that which not enriches him,

And makes me poor indeed.

His thefts were too open; his filching was like an unskillful finger, he kept no time.

He could discern cities like hives of bees, wherein every bee did nought else but sting; some like hornets, some like filch-

ing wasps, others as drones.

What made thee venture to betray,

And filch the lady's heart away.

The pismire was formerly a husbandman, that secretly filched away his neighbour's goods.

Fain would they filch that little food away,

While unresist'd those happy gluttons prey.

So speeds the wily fox, alarm'd by fear,

Who lately filch'd the turkey's callow care.

FILCHER. n. f. [from filch.] A thief; a petty robber.

FILE. n. f. [file, French; filum, a thread, Latin.]

1. A thread.

But let me resume the file of my relation, which this object of books, best agreeable to my course of life, hath a little interrupted.

2. A line on which papers are strung to keep them in order.

All records, wherein there was any memory of the king's attainder, should be cancelled and taken off the file.

The petitions being thus prepared, do you continually let apart an hour in a day to peruse them, and then rank them into several files, according to the subject matters.

Th' apothecary-train is wholly blind;

From files a random recipe they take,

And many deaths of one prescription make.

3. A catalogue; roll; series.

Our present troubles grow upon the file

To five and twenty thousand men of choice.

The val'd file

Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle.

4. A line of soldiers ranged one behind another.

Those goodly eyes,
That o'er the files and muskets of the war
Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bend, now turn Upon a tawny front. Shakspeare, Antony and Cleopatra.
So saying, on he led his radiant files,
Dazzling the moon. Milten.

5. [Ætol, Saxon; vijls, Dutch.] An instrument to rub down prominences.

The rough or coarse-tooth'd file, if it be large, is called a rubber, and is to take off the unevenness of your work which the hammer made in the forging: the bastard-tooth'd file is to take out of your work the deep cuts, or file-strokes, the rough file made: the fine toothed file is to take out the cuts, or file-strokes the bastard file made; and the smooth file is to take out those cuts, or file-strokes, that the fine file made. Moxon.
Yet they had a file for the mattocks and for the coulters.

Sam. xiii. 21.

The smiths and armourers on palfreys ride,
Files in their hands and hammers at their side,
And nails for loofen'd spears, and thongs for shields provide.

Dryden's Tals.

FILE-CUTTER. n. f. [file and cut.] A maker of files.

Gad-steel is a tough sort of steel: filecutters use it to make their chisels, with which they cut their files. Moxon.

To FILE. v. a. [from filum, a thread.]

1. To bring upon a thread or wire. Whence to file a bill is to offer it in its order to the notice of the judge.

From the day his first bill was filed, he began to collect reports.

2. [from Æolan, Saxon.] To cut with a file.

They which would file away most from the largeness of that offer, do in more sparing terms acknowledge little less.

Hoster.

His humour is lofty, his discourse peremptory, his tongue fierd, and his eye ambitious. Shakspeare, Love's Labour's Lost.

Let men be careful how they attempt to cure a blemish by filing or cutting off the head of such an overgrown tooth. Roy.

3. [from filan.] To foul; to fully; to pollute. This fence is retained in Scotland.

For Banquo's issue have I fi'd my mind,
For them the gracious Duncan have I murder'd. Shakspeare.

His weeds, divinely fashioned,
All fi'd and mangl'd. Chapman's Iliads.

To FILE. v. n. [from the noun.] To march in a file, not abreast, but one behind another.

All ran down without order or ceremony, 'till we drew up in good order, and filed off. Tatler.

Did all the grosser atoms at the cell
Of chance file off to form the pond'rous ball,
And undetermin'd into order fall? Blackmore's Creation.

FILEMOT. n. f. [corrupted from feuille morte, a dead leaf, French.] A brown or yellow-brown colour.

The colours you ought to with for are blue or filemot, turned up with red.

FILER. n. f. [from fil.] One who files; one who uses the file in cutting metals.

FILELAL. adj. [filial-le, French; filius, Latin.]

1. Pertaining to a son; befitting a son.

My mischievous proceeding may be the glory of his filial piety, the only reward now left for so great a merit. Sadley.

From imposition of strict laws, to free
Acceptance of large grace; from servile fear
To filial; works of law, to works of faith. Milten.

He griev'd, he wept, the sight an image brought
Of his own filial love; a sadly pleasing thought. Dryden.

2. Bearing the character or relation of a son.

And thus the filial godhead answ'ring spoke.
Where the old myrtle her good influence sheds,
Sprigs of life leaf erect their filial heads;
And when the parent rose decays and dies,
With a rebenfing face the daughter buds arife. Prior.

FILIA-TION. n. f. [from filius, Latin.] The relation of a son to a father; correlative to paternity.

The relation of paternity and filiation, between the first and second person, and the relation between the sacred persons of the Trinity, and the denomination thereof, must needs be eternal, because the terms of relation between whom that relation arifeth were eternal. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

FILINGS. n. f. [without a singular; from fil.] Fragments rubbed off by the action of the file.

The filings of iron infused in vinegar, will, with a decoction of galls, make good ink, without any copperose at all.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The chippings and filings of those jewels are of more value than the whole mass of ordinary authors. Felton.

To FILE. v. n. [filan, Saxon.]

1. To store 'till no more can be admitted.

Fill thine horn with oil. Sam. xvi. 1.

Nothing but the supreme and absolute Infinite can adequately fill and super-abundantly satisfy the infinite desires of intelligent beings. Chagne's Phil. Princ.

4. To glut; to surfeit.

Thou art going to lord Timon's feast.
—Ay, to see meat fill knaves, and wine heat fools. Shakspeare.

5. To FILL out. To pour out liquor for drink.

6. To FILL out. To extend by something contained.

I only speak of him
Whom pomp and greatness fits to loose about,
That he wants majesty to fill them out. Dryden.

7. To FILL up. [Up is often used without much addition to the force of the verb.] To make full.

Hope leads from goal to goal,
And opens still, and opens on his soul;
'Till lengthen'd on to faith, and unconfin'd,
It pours the bliss that fills up all the mind. Pope.

8. To FILL up. To supply.

When the several trades and professions are supplied, you will find most of those that are proper for war absolutely necessary for filling up the laborious part of life, and carrying on the underwork of the nation. Addison on the War.

9. To FILL up. To occupy by bulk.

There would not be altogether so much water required for the land as for the sea, to raise them to an equal height; because mountains and hills would fill up part of that space upon the land, and so make less water requisite. Burnet.

10. To FILL up. To engage; to employ.

Is it far you ride?
—As far, my lord, as will fill up the time
'Twixt this and supper. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

To FILL. v. n.

Things that are sweet and fat are more filling, and do swim and hang more about the mouth of the stomach, and go not down so speedily. Bacon's Natural History.

4. To FILL up. To grow full.

Neither the Palus Meotis nor the Euxine, nor any other seas, fill up, or by degrees grow shallower. Woodward.

The first stage of healing, or the discharge of matter, is by surgeons called digestion; the second, or the filling up with flesh, incarnation; and the last, or skinning over, cicatrization.

Sharp's Surgery.

FILL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. As much as may produce complete satisfaction.

Her neck and breasts were ever open bare,
That aye thereof her babes might suck their fill. Spenser.

But thus inflam'd bespoke the captain,
Who scorneth peace shall have his fill of war. Fairfax.

When ye were thirsty, did I not cleave the rock, and waters flowed out to your fill? 2 Esd. i. 20.

Mean while enjoy
Your fill, what happiness this happy state
Can comprehend, incapable of more. Milten.

Amid the tree now got, where plenty hung
Tempting to nigh, to pluck and eat my fill
I spar'd not. Milten.

Which made me gently first remove your fears,
That fo you might have room to entertain
Your fill of joy. Denham's Sophy.

Your barbarity, which I have heard so long exclaimed against in town and country, may have its fill of destruction. Pope.

2. [More properly thill.] The place between the shafts of a carriage.

This mule being put in the fill of a cart, run away with the cart and timber. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FILLER. n. f. [from fill.]

1. Any thing that fills up room without use.

'Tis a meer filler, to stop a vacancy in the hexameter, and connect the preface to the work of Virgil. Dryden.

A mixture of tender gentle thoughts and suitable expressions, of forced and inextricable conceits, and of needless fillers up to the rest. Pope.

2. One whose employment is to fill vessels of carriage.

They commonly have three, four, five or six hewers or diggers to four fillers, being proportioned fo as to keep the fillers always at work. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FILLET. n. f. [fillet, French; filum, Latin.]

1. A band tied round the head or other part.

His baleful breath insinuating, as he glides,
Now like a chain around her neck he slides. Now

- Now like a fillet to her head repairs, Dryden.
 And with his circling volumes folds her hairs.
 She scorn'd the praise of beauty, and the care;
 A belt her waist, a fillet binds her hair. Pope.
2. The fleshy part of the thigh: applied commonly to veal.
 The youth approach'd the fire, and as it burn'd,
 On five sharp broachers rank'd, the roast they turn'd:
 These morfels stay'd their stomachs; then the rest
 They cut in legs and fillets for the feast. Dryden.
3. Meat rolled together, and tied round.
Fillet of a fenny snake, Shakspeare. Macbeth.
 In the cauldron boil and bake.
 The mixture thus, by chymick art
 United close in every part,
 In fillets roll'd, or cut in pieces,
 Appear'd like one continu'd species. Swift.

 ments and mouldings, and is otherwise called lifel. Harrii.
To FILLET. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To bind with a bandage or fillet.
 2. To adorn with an astringal.
 He made hooks for the pillars, and overlaid their chapters and filleted them. Ex. xxxviii. 28.
To FILLIP. v. a. [A word, says Skinner, formed from the sound. This resemblance I am not able to discover, and therefore am inclined to imagine it corrupted from fill up, by some combination of ideas which cannot be recovered.] To strike with the nail of the finger by a sudden spring or motion, Shakspeare.
 I'll do, fillip me with a three-man beetle.
 Then let the pebbles on the hungry beach
Filip the stars: then let the mutinous winds Shakspeare.
 Strike the proud cedars 'gainst the fiery fun.
 We see, that if you filip a lutestring, it sheweth double or treble. Bacon's Natural History.
FILLIP. n. f. [from the verb.] A jerk of the finger let go from the thumb.
FILLY. n. f. [filie, Welsh; filie, French.]
 1. A young horse or mare.
 Geld filies, but tits, yer a nine days of age,
 They did else of gelding, or gelders do rage:
 Young filies so likely of bulk and of bone,
 Keep such to be breeders, let gelding alone. Tass. Husband.
 A well-wayed horse will convey thee to thy journey's end, when an unbacked filly may give thee a fall. Suckling.
 2. A young mare, opposed to a colt or young horse.
 I jelt to Oberon, and make him smile,
 When I a fat and bean-fed hegg beguile, Shakspeare.
 Neighing in likeness of a filly foal.

 who are defcrib'd in the old poet. Addison's Spectator.
FILM. n. f. [pylmeja, Saxon.] A thin pellicle or skin.
 While the silver needle did work upon the fight of his eye, to remove the film of the cataract, he never saw any thing more clear and perfect than that white needle. Bacon.
 Michael from Adam's eyes the film remov'd,
 Which that false fruit that promis'd clearest light
 Had bred. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 A stone is held up by the films of the bladder, and so kept from grating or offending it. Gruant's Bill of Mortality.
 There is not one infidel so ridiculous as to pretend to solve the phenomena of fight, fancy, or cogitation, by those fleeting superficial films of bodies. Bentley's Sermons.
 He from thick films shall purge the visual ray,
 And on the sightless eyeballs pour the day. Pope's Messiah.
To FILM. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with a pellicle or thin skin.
 It will but skin and film the ulcerous place,
 Whilst rank corruption, mining all within,
 Infects unseen. Shakspeare. Hamlet.
FILMY. adj. [from film.] Composed of thin membranes or pellicles.
 So the false spider, when her nets are spread,
 Deep ambush'd in her silent den does lie;
 And feels, far off, the trembling of her thread,
 Whose filmy cord should bind the struggling fly. Dryden.
 They with fruitless toil
 Flap filmy pinions off, to extricate
 Their feet in liquid shackles bound, 'till death
 Bereave them of their worthless fool; such doom
 Waits luxury, and lawless love of gain. Philips.
 Loose to the winds their airy garments flew,
 Thin glit'ring textures of the filmy dew;
 Dipt in the richest tincture of the skies,
 Where light disports in ever-mingling dyes. Pope.
To FILTER. v. a. [filtru, low Latin; per flum trabere.]
 1. To defecate by drawing off liquor by depending threads.
 2. To strain; to percolate.
 Dilute this liquor with fair water, filter it through a paper,
 and so evaporate it. Grew's Muscum.
FILTER. n. f. [filtrum, Latin.]
 1. A piece of thread, of which one end is dipped in the liquor to be defecated, and the other hangs below the bottom of the vessel, so that the liquor drips from it. See NEW DISPEN-SATORY.

2. A strainer; a searce.
 That the water, passing through the veins of the earth, should be rendered fresh and potable, which it cannot be by any percolations we can make, but the saline particles will pass through a tenfold filter. Roy on the Creation.
FILTH. n. f. [filth, Saxon.]
 1. Dirt; nastiness; any thing that soils or fouls.
 When we in our viciousness grow hard,
 The wife gods seal our eyes;
 In our own filth drop our clear judgments. Shakspeare.
 Wisdom and goodness to the vile seem vile;
Filth favour but themselves. Shakspeare. King Lear.
 Neither may you trust waters that taste sweet; for they are commonly found in rising grounds of great cities, which must needs take in a great deal of filth. Bacon.
 How perfect then is man? From head to foot
 Defil'd with filth, and rotten at the root.
 Though perhaps among the rout
 He wildly sings his filth about;
 He still has gratitude and sap'ence,
 To spare the folks that give him ha'pence. Swift.
 2. Corruption; grossness; pollution.
 Such do likewise exceedingly dispose us to piety and religion, by purifying our souls from the drofs and filth of sensual desires. Tillotson's Sermons.
FILTHILY. adv. [from filthy.] Nastily; foully; grossly.
 It stuck filthily in the camel's stomach that bulls, bears, and theskive, should be armed, and that a creature of his size should be left defenceless. L'Estrange's Fables.
FILTHINESS. n. f. [from filthy.]
 1. Nastiness; foulness; dirtiness.
 Men of virtue suppressed it, lest their shining should discover the other's filthiness. Sidney.
 2. Corruption; pollution.
 They held this land, and with their filthiness
 Polluted this same gentle soil long time,
 That their own mother loath'd their beastliness,
 And 'gan abhor her brood's unkindly crime,
 All were they born of her own native time. Fairy Queen.
 They never duly improved the utmost of such a power, but gave themselves up to all the filthiness and licentiousness of life imaginable. South's Sermons.
FILTHY. adj. [from filth.]
 1. Nasty; foul; dirty.
 Fair is foul, and foul is fair;
 Hover through the fog and filthy air. Shakspeare. Macbeth.
 2. Gross; polluted.
 As all stories are not proper subjects for an epic poem or a tragedy, so neither are they for a noble picture: the subjects both of the one and of the other, ought to have nothing of immoral, low, or filthy in them. Dryden's Discourse.
To FILTRATE. v. a. [from filtru.] To strain; to percolate;
 to filter.
 The extract obtained by the former operation, burnt to ashes, and those ashes boiled in water and filtrated, yield a very salt. Arbuthnot on Acids.
FILTRATION. n. f. [from filtrate.] A method by which liquors are procured fine and clear. The filtration in it is straining a liquor through paper, which, by the fineness of its pores, admits only the finer parts through, and keeps the rest behind. Quincy.
 We took then common nitre, and having by the usual way of solution, filtration, and coagulation, reduced it into crystals, we put four ounces of this purified nitre into a strong new cru-cible. Boyle.
FIMBLE Hemp. n. f.
 The season of pulling of it is first about Lammas, when good part of it will be ripe; that is, the light Summer hemp, that bears seed, which is called fimble hemp. Mortimer's History.
 Good flax and good hemp, for to have of her own,
 In May a good housewife will see it be sown;
 And afterwards trim it, to serve at a need.
 The fimble to spin, and the carle for her feed. Tass. Elyth.
FIN. n. f. [fan, Saxon; vinc, Dutch.] The wing of a fish;
 the limb by which he balances his body, and moves in the water.
 He that depends
 Upon your favours, swims with fins of lead,
 And hews down oaks with rustics. Shakspeare. Othello.
 Their fins consist of a number of grizzly bones, long and slender, der, like pins and needles. Alcock.
 Thus at half-ebb a rowling sea
 Returns, and wins upon the shore;
 The watry herd, affrighted at the roar,
 Rest on their fins awhile, and flays.
 Then backward take their wond'ring way.
 Still at his oar the industrious Libys plies;
 But as he plies, each busy arm thrinks in,
 And by degrees is fashioned to a fin. Dryden.
FIN-TOE. n. f.

FIN-FEETED. adj. [fin and feet.] Palmipedous; having feet with membranes between the toes.

It is derisively like sippides, or birds which have their feet or claws divided; whereas it is palmipedous or fin-feet'd, like swans and geese, according to the method of nature in latirostous or flat-billed birds; which being generally swimmers, the organ is wisely contrived unto the action, and they are framed with fins or oars upon their feet. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FINABLE. adj. [from fin.] That admits a fine.

This is the order for writs of covenant that he finable. Bacon.
He sent letters to the council, wherein he acknowledged himself favoured in bringing his cause finable. Hayward.

FINAL. adj. [finalis, French; finalis, Latin.]

Shook; but delay'd to strike, though oft invok'd
With vows, as their chief good, and final hope. Milton.

2. Conclusive; decisive.

There be many examples where sea-fights have been final to the war. Bacon's Essays.
Henry spent his reign in establishing himself, and had neither leisure nor opportunity to undertake the final conquest of Ireland. Davies on Ireland.

3. Mortal; destructive.

At last resolv'd to work his final smart,
He lifted up his hand, but back again did start. Spenser.

4. Respecting the end or motive.

Some things in such sort are allowed, that they be also required as necessary unto salvation, by way of direct, immediate, and proper necessity final; so that, without performance of them, they cannot by ordinary course be saved, nor by any means be excluded from life, observing them. Hobbes.

By its gravity fire raises the water in pumps, siphons, and other engines; and performs all those feats which former philosophers, through ignorance of the efficient cause, attributed to a final, namely, nature's abhorrence of a vacuum. Ray.
Your answering in the final cause, makes me believe you are at a loss for the efficient. Collier on Thought.

FINALLY. adv. [from final.]

1. Ultimately; lastly; in conclusion.

Sight bereav'd
May chance to number thee with those Whom patience finally must crown. Milton's Agonistes.

2. Completely; without recovery.

Their houses were many times in danger of ruin; yet was there not any house of noble English in Ireland utterly destroyed, or finally rooted out by the hand of justice, but the house of Desmond only. Davies on Ireland.

Doubtless many men are finally lost, who yet have no means left to answer for but their own. Saunders's Sermons.

FINANCE. n. f. [French.] Revenue; income; profit. It is seldom used in the singular.

This sort of finance hath been increased by this new device. Bacon's Off. of Alienation.

To FIND. v. a. [fin, Saxon; vinden, Dutch.]

1. To obtain by searching or seeking.

Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find. Mat. vii. 7.

Whereas thou hast searched all my stuff, what hast thou found of all thy household stuff? Gen. xxxi. 37.

A bird that flies about,
And beats itself against the cage,
Finding at last no passage out,
It sits and sings. Cowley.

2. To obtain something lost.

When he hath found his sheep, he layeth it on his shoulders rejoicing. Luke, xv. 5.

In my school days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight
The self-same way, with more advised watch,
To find the other forth; by vent'ring both,
I lost found both. Shakspeare, Merchant of Venice.

3. To meet with; to fall upon.

There watchful at the gate they find Suspicion with her eyes behind. Dodley's Miscell.
In woods and forests thou art found. Cowley.
The bad mult mis, the good unfought shall find. Pope.

4. To know by experience.

How oft will he
Of thy chang'd faith complain!
And his fortunes find to be
So airy and so vain! Cowley.

The torrid zone is now found habitable.

Cowley.

5. To discover by study.

Physicians

With sharpen'd fight some remedies may find. Dryden.

Thy maid! ah, find some nobler theme,

Whereon thy doubts to place. Cowley.

6. To discover what is hidden.

A curse on him who found the ore.

Cowley.

7. To hit on by chance; to perceive by accident.

They build on sands, which if unmov'd they find,

'Tis but because there was no wind. Cowley.

8. To gain by any mental endeavour.

If we for happiness could leisure find,

And wand'ring time into a method bind,

We should not then the great men's favour need. Cowley.

Something to blame, and something to commend.

Pope.

9. To remark; to observe.

Beauty or wit in all I find. Cowley.

10. To detect; to reprehend; to catch.

When first found in a he, talk to him of it as a strange monstrous matter, and so shame him out of it. Locke.

11. To reach; to attain.

They are glad when they can find the grave. Job, iii. 22.

He did the utmost bounds of knowledge find,

Yet found them not so large as was his mind. Cowley.

12. To meet.

A clear conscience and heroick mind,

In ill their business and their glory find. Cowley.

pain, health or sickness.

Pray, sir, how d'ye find yourself? says the doctor. L'Estr.

18. To FIND out. To unriddle; to solve.

The finding out of parables is a wearisome labour of the mind. Ecclesiast. xiii. 26.

19. To FIND out. To discover something hidden.

Can't thou by searching find out God? Can't thou find out the Almighty unto perfection? Job, ii. 7.

There are agents in nature able to make the particles of bodies stick together by very strong attractions, and it is the business of experimental philosophy to find them out. Newton.

What hinders them, but that thou find her out,

And hurry her away by manly force! Addison's Cato.

20. To FIND out. To obtain the knowledge of.

The principal part of painting is to find out and thoroughly to understand what nature has made most beautiful. Dryden.

21. To FIND out. To invent; to excogitate.

A man of Tyre, skilful to work in gold, and to find out every device which shall be put to him. 2 Chron. ii. 14.

22. The particle out is added often without any other use than that it adds some force or emphasis to the verb.

While the proudly march'd about,

Greater conquests to find out,

She beat out Susan by the by. Cowley.

It is agreeable to compare the face of a great man with the character, and to try if we can find out in his looks and features either the haughty, cruel, or merciful temper. Addison.

He was afraid of being insulted with Greek; for which reason he desired a friend to find him out a clergyman rather of plain sense than much learning. Addison's Spectator.

FINDER. n. f. [from find.]

1. One that meets or falls upon any thing.

We will bring the device to the bar, and crown thee for a finder of mad men. Shakspeare, Twelfth Night.

2. One that picks up any thing lost.

Some lewd squeaking cryer,

Well pleas'd with one lean thread-bare goat for hire,

May like a devil roar through every street,

And gull the finder's conscience, if they meet. Donne.

O yes! if any happy eye

This roving wanton hath defery,

Let the finder surely know

Mine is the wag; 'tis I that owe

The winged wand'rer. Grayson.

FINDFAULT. n. f. [find and fault.] A censurer; a caviller.

We are the makers of manners, Kate; and the liberty that follows our places, stops the mouth of all findfaults. Shakspeare.

FINDRY. adj. [find, Saxon.] Plump; weighty; firm; solid.

Thus the proverb,

A cold May and a windy,

Makes the barn fat and findry;

means that it stores the barn with plump and firm grain. Jun.

FINE. adj. [fin, French; fin, Dutch and Esfe, perhaps from finius, completed, Latin.]

1. Not coarse.

Not any skill'd in loops of fingering fine,
With this so curious network might compare. Spenser.
He was arrayed in purple and fine linen. Luke.

3. Subtle; thin; tenuous: as, the fine spirits evaporate.

4. Refined; subtly excoigated.

In substance he promised himself money, honour, friends, and peace in the end; but these things were too fine to be fortunate, and succeeded in all parts. Bacon.

Whether the scheme has not been pursued so far as to draw it into practice, or whether it be too fine to be capable of it, I will not determine. Temple.

4. Keen; thin; smoothly sharp.

Great affairs are commonly too rough and stubborn to be wrought upon by the fine edges or points of wit. Bacon.

6. Clear; pellucid; transparent: as, the wine is fine.

7. Nice; exquisite; delicate.

Are they not senseless then, that think the foul

Nought but a fine perfection of the sense. Davies.

The irons of planes are set fine or rank: they are set fine, when they stand so shallow below the sole of the plane, that in working they take off a thin shaving. Mason.

8. At full; dexterous.

The wisdom of all these latter times, in princes affairs, is rather fine deliveries, and shiftings of dangers and mischiefs, than solid and downright counsels to keep them aloof. Bacon.

9. Fiaulent; fly; knavishly subtle.

Through his fine handling, and his cleanly play,

He all those royal signs had stol'n away. Hubbard's Tale.

10. Elegant; with elevation.

To call the trumpet by the name of the metal was fine. Dry.

11. Applied to person, it means behaviour with dignity.

12. Accomplished; elegant of manners.

He was not only the finest gentleman of his time, but one of the finest scholars. Fulton on the Classics.

13. Showy; splendid.

It is with a fine genius as with a fine fashion; all those are duplicated at it who are not able to follow it. Pope.

The fair part of mankind will needs believe, that it is not impossible to be very fine and very filthy. Swift.

14. [Ironically.] Something that will serve the purpose; something worth contemptuous notice.

That same knave, Ford, her husband, hath the finest mad devil of jealousy in him, master Brook, that ever governed frenzy. Shakspeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.

They taught us, indeed, to cloath: to dwell in houses,

To feast, to sleep on down, to be profuse:

A fine exchange for liberty. Philips's Briton.

FINE. n. f. [fin, Cimbr.]

1. A mulct; a pecuniary punishment.

The killing of an Irish man was not punished by our law, as as manslaughter, which is felony and capital; but by a fine or pecuniary punishment, called an erick. Davies on Ireland.

2. Penalty.

Er'n this ill night your breathing shall expire,

Paying the fine of rated treachery. Shakspeare. King John.

3. Forfeit; money paid for any exemption or liberty.

The spirit of wantonness is sure scared out of him: if the devil have him not in free-temple, with fine and recovery, he will never, I think, in the way of waste, attempt us again.

Shakspeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.

Beside fine set upon plays, games, balls and feasting, they have many customs which contribute to their simplicity. Addis.

How vain that second life in others breath,

Th' estate which wits inherit after death!

Ease, health, and life, for this they must resign,

Unsure the tenure, but how vast the fine! Pope.

4. [From finis, Latin; fin, finis, French.] The end; conclusion. It is seldom used but adverbially, in fine.

In fine, whatsoever he was, he was nothing but what pleased

Zelmane, the powers of his spirit depending of her. Sidney.

His resolution, in fine, is, that in the church a number of things are strictly observed, whereof no law of scripture maketh mention one way or other. Hobbes.

Still the fine's the crown;

Whate'er the course, the end is the renown. Shakspeare.

Your daughter, ere she seems as won,

Desires this ring; appoints him an encounter;

In fine, delivers me to fill the time,

Herself most chally absent. Shakspeare.

The blessings of fortune are the lowest: the next are the bodily advantages of strength and health; but the superlative blessings, in fine, are those of the mind. L'Estrange.

In fine, he wears no limbs about him found,

With force and tickness beaueg'd round. Dryden.

In fine, let there be a perfect relation betwixt the parts and the whole, that they may be entirely of a piece. Dryden.

To FINE. v. a. [from fine, the adjective.]

1. To refine; to purify.

The fining pot is for silver, and the furnace for gold. Prov.

There is a vein for the silver, and a place for gold, where they fine it. Job. xlviii. 1.

2. To embellish; to decorate. Now not in use.

Hugh Capet also, who usurp'd the crown,

To fine his title with some fiew of truth,

Convey'd himself as heir to th' lady Langare. Shakspeare.

3. To make less coarse.

It fines the graft, but makes it short, though thick. Adm.

4. To make transparent.

It is good also for fuel, not to omit the shavings of it for the fining of wine. Mrs. Prim's Hb. and v.

5. [From the substantive.] To punish with pecuniary penalty.

To fine men one third of their fortune, without any crime committed, seems very hard. Luke.

To FINE. v. n. To pay a fine.

By rhymes and verse did ever lord mayor grow? Oldham.

To FINE DRA'W. v. a. [fin and draw.] To sow up a rent with so much nicety that it is not perceived.

FINE DRA'WER. n. f. [from fin and draw.] One whose business is to sow up rents.

FINE FINGERED. adj. [fine and finger.] Nice; artful; exquisite.

The most fine-finger'd workman on the ground,

Arachne, by his means was vanquish'd. Spenser.

FINELY. adv. [from fine.]

1. Beautifully; elegantly; more than justly.

Plutarch says very finely, that a man should not allow himself to hate even his enemies; because, says he, if you in ulte this passion on some occasions, it will rise of itself in others

to hate even his enemies; because, says he, if you in ulte this passion on some occasions, it will rise of itself in others

FIN

FINESSÉ. n. f. [French.] Artifice; stratagem: an unnecessary word which is creeping into the language.

A circumstance not much to be stood upon, in case it were not upon some finis.

FINER. n. f. [from fin.] One who purifies metals.

I take away the dross from the silver, and there shall come forth a vessel for the finer. Prov.

FINGER. n. f. [Saxons, from fangen, to hold.]

1. The flexible member of the hand by which men catch and hold.

The finger and thumb in each hand consist of fifteen bones, there being three to each finger: they are a little convex and round towards the back of the hand, but hollow and plain towards the palm, except the last, where the nail are. The order of their dispositions is called first, second, and third phalanx: the first is longer than the second, and the second longer than the third. The upper extremity of the first bone on each finger has a little sinus, which receives the round head of the bones of the metacarpus. The upper extremity of the second and third bones of each finger hath two small sinuses, parted by a small protuberance; and the lower extremity of the first and second bones of each finger has two protuberances, divided by a small sinus: the two protuberances are received into the two finises of the upper extremity of the second and third bones; and the small finis receives the little protuberance of the same end of the same bones. The first bone of the thumb is like the bones of the metacarpus, and it is joined to the wrist and second of the thumb, as they are to the wrist and first of the fingers. The second bone of the thumb is like the first bones of the fingers, and it is joined to the first and third, as they are to the bones of the metacarpus and second of the fingers. The fingers are moved sideways only upon their first joint. Besides these there are some small bones, called ossa sesamoides, because they resemble sesamum grains: they are reckoned about twelve in each hand: they are placed at the joint of the fingers, under the tendons of the flexors, to which they serve a pulleys. Quincy.

You seem to understand me,
By each at once her choppy finger laying Upon her skinny lips. Shakespeare.

Diogenes, who is never said,
For aught that ever I could read,
To whine, put finger i' th' eye and sob,
Because h' had ne'er another tub. Hudibras.

The hand is divided into four fingers bending forward, and one opposite to them bending backwards, and of greater strength than any of them singly, which we call the thumb, to join with them severally or united; whereby it is fitted to lay hold of objects of any size or quantity. Ray.

A hand of a vast extension, and a prodigious number of fingers playing upon all the organ pipes of the world, and making every one found a particular note. Ke'l.

Poor Peg sewed, spun, and knit for a livelihood, 'till her finger ends were fore. Arbutnot.

2. A small measure of extension.
Go now, go trust the wind's uncertain breath,
Remov'd four fingers from approaching death;
Or even at most, when thickest is the board. Dryd.

One of these bows with a little arrow did pierce through a piece of steel three fingers thick. Wilkins.

3. The hand; the instrument of work; manufacture; art.
Fool, that forgets her stubborn look
This subtleties from finger took. Waller.

TO FINGER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To touch lightly; to toy with.

Go, yet you gone, and let the papers lie;
You would be *finger*ing them to anger me. Shakespeare.

One that is covetous is not so highly pleased with the meek fight and *finger*ing of money, as with the thoughts of his being considered as a wealthy man. Greuv.

2. To touch unseasonably or thieftily.
His ambition would needs be *finger*ing the scepter, and hoisting him into his father's throne. South.

3. To touch an instrument of music.
She hath broke the lute;
I did but tell her the mistook her frets,
And bow'd her hand to teach her *finger*ing. Shakespeare.

4. To perform any work exquisitely with the fingers.
Not any skill'd in loops of finger fine,
With this so curious net-work might compare. Spenser.

FINGLEFANGLE. n. f. [from fangle.] A trifle: a builetique word.

We agree in nothing but to wrangle,
About the lightest finglefangle. Hudibras.

FINICAL. adj. [from fin.] Nice; foppish; pretending to superfluous elegance.

A whorlson, gallingazing, superfluous, finical rogue. Shakespeare's King Lear.

I cannot hear a finical top romancing, how the king took him aside at such a time; what the queen said to him at another. L'Estrange's Fables.

FINICALLY. adv. [from finical.] Foppishly.

FIN

FINICALNESS. n. f. [from finical.] Superfluous nicety; foppish.

TO FINISH. v. a. [from finir, French; finis, Latin.]

1. To bring to the end purposed; to complete.
For which of you, intending to build a tower, sitteth not down first and counteth the cost, whether he have sufficient to finish it? Luke.

As he had begun, so he would also finish in you the same grace. 2 Corinthians.

A poet uses epifodes; but epifodes, taken separately, finish nothing. Notes on the Odyssey.

2. To perfect; to polish to the excellency intended.
Though here you all perfection should not find,
Yet is it all th' Eternal Will design'd;

It is a finish'd work, and perfect in his kind. Blackmore.

I would make what bears your name as finish'd as my last work ought to be; that is, more finish'd than the rest. Pope.

3. To end; to put an end on.

FINISHER. n. f. [from finish.]

1. Reformer; accomplisher.
He that of great works is finisher,
Oft does them by the weakest minister. Shakespeare.

a. One that puts an end; ender.

This was the plain conclusion of those times; the whole world against Athanasius, and Athanasius against it: half an hundred of years spent in doubtful trials which of the two, in the end, would prevail; the side which had all, or else that part which had no friend but God and death, the one a defender of his innocence, the other a finisher of all his troubles. Holzer.

3. One that completes or perfects.
The author and finisher of our faith. Hebrews.

O prophet of glad tidings! finisher
Of utmost hope! Milton.

FINITE. adj. [from finis, Latin.] Limited; bounded; terminated.

Servius conceives no more thereby than a finite number for indefinite. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Finite of any magnitude holds not any proportion to infinite. Locke.

That supposed infinite duration will, by the very supposition, be limited at two extremes, though never to remote afulness, and consequently must needs be finite. Bentley.

FINITELESS. adj. [from finite.] Without bounds; unlimited.
It is ridiculous unto reason, and finiteless as their desires. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FINITELY. adj. [from finite.] Within certain limits; to a certain degree.

They are creatures still, and that sets them at an infinite distance from God; whereas all their excellencies can make them but finutely distant from us. Stillington.

FINITENESS. n. f. [from finite.] Limitation; confinement within certain boundaries.

I ought now to unbay the current of my passion, and love without other boundary than what is set by the finiteness of my natural powers. Norris.

FINITUDE. n. f. [from finite.] Limitation; confinement within certain boundaries.

Finitude, applied to natural or created things, imports the proportions of the several degrees of affections, or properties of these things: to one another; infinitude, the unboundedness of these degrees of affections, or properties. Chyren.

FINLESS. adj. [from fin.] Without fins.

He angers me
With telling of the moldwarp and the ant,
And of a dragon and a finless fish. Shakespeare.

FINLIKE. adj. [fin and like.] Formed in imitation of fins.

In shipping such as this, the Irish kern,
And untaw Indian, on the ream did glide;
Ere sharp-keel'd boats to stem the flood did learn,
Or finlike oars did spread from either side. Dryd.

FINNED. a. j. [from fin.] Having broad edges spread out on either side.

I hey plow up the turf with a broad finned plough. Mort.

FINNY. adj. [from fin.] Furnished with fins; formed for the element of water.

High o'er the main in wat'ry pomp he rides,
His azure car and finny couriers guides;
Protus his name. Dryd n.

New herds of beasts he sends the plains to share;
New colonies of birds to people air;
And to their ozzy beds the finny fish repair. Dryd.

While black with storms the ruffled ocean rolls,

To FLAG. v. n. [flaggeret, Dutch; pleoan, Saxon, to fly.]

1. To hang loose without stiffness or tension.

Beds of cotton wool hung up between two trees, nor far from the ground; in the which flagging down in the middle, men, wives and children lie together.

Abbot.

The jades

That drag the tragic melancholy night,

Who with their drowsy, slow, and flagging wings

Clip dead men's graves.

Shaksfp.

It keeps those slender aerial bodies separated and stretched out, which otherwise, by reason of their flexibility and weight, would fly or curl.

Boyle.

Like a fiery meteor sunk the sun,

The promise of a storm; the shifting gases

Forfake by us, and fill the flagging sails.

Dryden.

2. To grow spiritless or dejected.

My flagging soul flies under her own pitch,

Like fowl in air too damp, and lags along

As if she were a body in a body:

My senses too are dull and stupify'd,

Their edge rebated: sure some ill approaches.

Dryd.

The pleasures of the town begin to flag and grow languid, giving way daily to cruel inroads from the spleen.

Swift.

3. To grow feeble; to lose vigour.

Juice in language is somewhat less than blood; for if the words be but becoming and signifying, and the sense gentle, there is juice: but where that wanteth, the language is thin, flagging, poor, starved, scarce covering the bone, and shews like stones in a sack: some men, to avoid redundancy, run into that; and while they strive to hinder ill blood or juice, they lose their good.

Ben. Jonson.

His stomach will expect visuals at the usual hour, and grow peevish if he passes it; either fretting itself into a troublesome excess, or flagging into a downright want of appetite.

Locke.

There must be a noble train of actions to preserve his fame in life and motion; for, when it is once at a stand, it naturally flags and languishes.

Addison.

If on sublimer wings of love and praise,
My love above the stary vault I raise,

Lur'd by some vain conceit of pride or lust,
I flag, I drop, and sutter in the dust.

Arbutnot.

He fees a spirit hath been raised against him, and he only watches 'till it begins to flag: he goes about watching when to devour us.

Swift.

To FLAG. v. a.

1. To let fall; to suffer to drop.

Take heed, my dear, youth flies space;

As well as Cupid, Time is blind:

Sown must those glories of thy face

The fate of vulgar beauty find:

The thousand loves, that arm thy potent eye,

Must drop their quivers, flag their wings, and die.

Prior.

2. [From flag, a species of stone.] To lay with broad stone.

The fides and floor are all flagged with excellent marble. Sand.

There be divers fishes that cast their spawn on flags or stones.

Walton's Angler.

Cut flag roots, and the roots of other weeds.

Mori.

2. The colours or ensign of a ship or land forces, by which signals are made at sea, or regiments are distinguished in the field.

These flags of France that are advanced here,

Before the eye and prospect of your town,

Have hither march'd to your endamageant.

Shak.

He hangs out as many flags as he decketh vessels; square, if ships; if galleys, pendants.

Sandy.

Let him be girt

With all the grisly legions that troop

Under the footy flag of Acheron,

Harpies and hydrae, or all the monstrous forms

'T'wixt Africa and Inde, I'll find him out,

And force him to restore his purchase back,

Or drag him by the curls to a foul death.

Milton.

The French and Spaniard, when your flags appear,

Forget their hatred, and consent to fear.

Waller.

The interpretation of that article about the flag is a ground at pleasure for opening a war.

Temple.

In either flag the golden serpents bear,

Erecting crests alike, like volumes rear,

And mingle friendly hidings in the air.

Dryden.

Then they, whose mothers, frantic with their fear,

In woods and wilds the flags of Baccus bear,

And lead his dances with dishevel'd hair.

Dryden.

3. A species of stone used for smooth pavements. [flachs, old French.]

Part of two flags striated, but deeper on one side than the other.

Woodward.

Flagstone will not split, as slate does, being found formed into flags, or thin plates, which are no other than so many strata.

Woodward.

FLAG-BROOM. n. f. [from flag and broom.] A broom for sweeping flags or pavements, commonly made of birch-twigs, or of the leaves of the dwarf palm, imported from Spain.

of tension.

FLA'GGY. adj. [from flag.]

1. Weak; lax; limber; not stiff; not tense.

His flaggy wings, when forth he did display,

Were like two falls, in which the hollow wind

Is gather'd full, and worketh speedy way.

Fairly Queen.

That basking in the sun thy bee may lye,

And resting there, their flaggy pinions dry.

Dryden.

2. Weak in taste; insipid.

Graft an apple-cion upon the stock of a colewort, and it will bear a great flaggy apple.

Bacon.

FLAGITIOUS. adj. [from flagitius, Latin.] Wicked; villi-nious; atrocious.

No villany or flagitious action was ever yet committed, but upon a due enquiry into the causes of it, it will be found that a lye was first or last the principal engine to effect it. South.

There's no working upon a flagitious and perverse nature by kindness and discipline.

L'Estrange.

First, those flagitious times,

Pregnant with unknown crimes,

Conspire to violate the nuptial bed.

Rafsmann.

Perjury is a crime of the flagitious a nature, we cannot be too careful in avoiding every approach towards it.

Addison.

But if in noble minds home drugs remain,
Not yet purg'd off, of spleen and loud disdain,
Discharge that rage on more provoking crimes,
Nor fear a death in these flagitious times.

Pope.

FLAGITIOUSNESS. n. f. [from flagitius.] Wickedness; villainy.

FLAGON. n. f. [flaccid, Welsh; flaxe, Saxon; flask, Danish; flaca, French; flajo, Italian; flasca, Spanish.] A vessel of drink with a narrow mouth.

A mad rogue! he pour'd a flagon of Rhenish on my head once.

More had sent him by a suitor in Chancery two silver flagons.

Did they coin pipets, bowls, and flagons?

Int' officers of horse and dragons?

His trusty flagon, full of potent juice,

Was hanging by, worn thin with age and use.

One flagon walks the round, that none should think

They either change, or flint him of his drink.

FLAGRANCY. n. f. [flagrantia, Latin.] Burning; heat; fire.

Lust caught a flagrancy in the eye; as the fight and the touch are the things desired, and therefore the spirits resort to those parts.

FLAGRANT. adj. [flagrant, Latin.]

1. Ardent; burning; eager.

A thing which filleth the mind with comfort and heavenly delight, flurth up flagrant desires and affections, correspondent unto that which the words contain.

2. Glowing; flushed.

See Sappho, at her toilet's greasy task,

And issuing flagrant to an evening mask:

So morning insects, that in muck begun,

Shine, buzz, and fly-blow in the fetting fun.

3. Red; imprinted red.

Their common loves, a lewd abandon'd pack,

The beadle's lath still flagrant on their back.

4. Notorious; flaming.

When a fraud is great, it furnishes weapons to defend itself; and at worst, if the crimes be so flagrant that a man is laid aside out of perfect shame, he retires loaded with the spoils of the nation.

With equal poize let steady justice sway,

And flagrant crimes with certain vengeance pay;

But, 'till the proofs are clear, the stroke delay.

FLAGRATION. n. f. [flagro, Latin.] Burning.

FLAGSTAFF. n. f. [flag and staff.] The staff on which the flag is fixed.

The duke, less numerous, but in courage more,

On wings of all the winds to combat flies:

His murdering guns a loud defiance roar,

And bloody crochets on his flagstaff rise.

FLAIL. n. f. [flagellum, Latin; fiegel, German.] The instrument with which grain is beaten out of the ear; the tool of the threshing.

Our soldiers, like the night owl's lazy flight,

Fell gently down as if they struck their friends.

When in one night, ere glimpe of morn,

His shadowy flail hath thrill'd the corn,

That ten day-labourers could not end.

In this pile should reign a mighty prince,

Born for a scourge of wit, and flail of sense.

The dextrous handling of the flail, or the plough, and being good workmen with these tools, did not hinder Gideon's and Cincinnatus's skill in arms, nor make them less able in the arts of war and government.

The threshing, Duck, could o'er the queen prevail;

The proverb says, no fence against a flail.

FLAKE. n. f. [flaccus, Latin.]

1. Any thing that appears loosely held together, like a flock of wool.

Crimson circles, like red flakes in the element, when the weather is hottest.

And from his wide devouring oven sent

A flake of fire, that flushing in his beard,

Him all amaz'd, and almost made afraid.

The earth is sometimes covered with snow two or three feet deep, made up only of little flakes or pieces of ice.

Small drops of a milking rain, descending through a freezing air, do each of them shoot into one of those figured icicles; which, being ruffled by the wind, in their fall are broken, and clustered together into small parcels, which we call flakes of snow.

Upon throwing in a stone the water boils for a considerable time, and at the same time are seen little flakes of foam rising up.

2. A stratum; layer; film; lamina.

The flakes of his tough flesh so firmly bound,

As not to be divorced by a wound.

A labourer in his left hand holding the head of the center-pin, and with his right drawing about the beam and teeth, which cut and tore away great flakes of the metal, 'till it received the perfect form the teeth would make.

3. FLAKE. v. a. [from the noun.] To form in flakes or bodies loosely connected.

From the bleak pole no winds inclement blow,
Mold the round hail, or flake the fleecy snow.

To FLAKE. v. n. To break into laminae; to part in loose bodies.

FLAKE. adj. [from flake.]

1. Loosely hanging together.

The silent hour steals on,
And flakey darkness breaks within the east.

The trumpet roars, long flakey flames expire,
With sparks that seem to set the world on fire.

Hence, when the snows in winter cease to weep,
And undissolv'd the flakey texture keep,

The banks with ease their humble streams contain,
Which swell in summer, and those banks disdain.

2. Lying in layers or strata; broken into laminae.

FLAM. n. f. [A cant word of no certain etymology.] A falsehood; a lie; an illusory pretext.

A flam more fenelids than the rogery

Of old arsupiny and augtry.

'Till these men can prove the things, ordered by our church, to be either intrinsically unlawful or indecent, all pretences or pleas of conscience to the contrary are nothing but cant and cheat, flam and delusion.

What are most of the histories of the world but lies? Lies immortalized and consigned over as a perpetual abuse and sin upon posterity.

To FLAM. v. a. [from the noun.] To deceive with a lie.

Merely cant.

For so our ignorance was flam'd,
To damn ourselves 't'avoid being damn'd.

God is not to be flam'd off with lies, who knows exactly what thou can't do, and what not.

FLAMBEAU. n. f. [French.] A lighted torch.

The king seiz'd a flambeau with zeal to destroy.

As the attendants carried each of them a flambeau in their hands, the Sultan, after having ordered all the lights to be put out, gave the word to enter the house, find out the criminal, and but him to death.

FLAME. n. f. [flamma, Latin; flamme, French.]

1. Light emitted from fire.

Is not flame a vapour, fume, or exhalation heated red hot, that is, so hot as to shine? For bodies do not flame without emitting a copious fume, and this fume burns in the flame.

2. Fire.

Jove, Prometheus' theft allow;
The flames he once stole from thee, grant him now.

3. Ardour of temper or imagination; brightness of fancy; vigour of thought.

Of all our elder plays,
This and Philaster have the loudest fame;

Great are their faults, and glorious is their flame;
In both our English genius is express'd,

Lofty and bold, but negligently dress'd.

4. Ardour of inclination.

Smit with the love of kindred arts we came,
And met congenial, mingling flame with flame.

5. Passion of love.

My heart's on flame, and does like fire

To her aspire.

Come arm'd in flames; for I would prove

All the extremities of love.

No warning of th' approaching flame;
Swiftly like sudden death it came:

I lov'd the moment I beheld.

To FLAME. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shine as fire; to burn with emission of light.

Can you think to blow out the intended fire ready to flame in, with such weak breath as this?

He fell flaming through th' ethereal sky

To bottomless perdition.

Hell all around

As one great furnace flam'd.

2. To shine like flame.

Behold it like an ample curtain spread,
Now streak'd and glowing with the morning red;

Anon at noon in flaming yellow bright,
And chusing fable for the peaceful night.

3. To break out in violence of passion.

FLAMECOLOURED. adj. [flame and colour.] Of a bright yellow colour.

'Tis strong, and it does indifferent well in flamecoloured stockings.

August shall bear the form of a young man of a fierce and choleric aspect, in a flamecoloured garment.

1. Inflamed; burning; flaming.

My thoughts imprison'd in my secret woes,
With flamy breaths do issue oft in found. Sidney.

2. Having the nature of flame.

The vital spirits of living creatures are a substance compounded of an airy and flamy matter; and though air and flame, being free, will not well mingle, yet bound in by a body they will. Bacon's Natural History.

FLANK. n. f. [flank, French, according to Herault, from λαγών; more probably from latus, Latin.]

1. That part of the side of a quadruped near the hinder thigh.

The belly shall be eminent by shadowing the flank. Peach.

2. [In men.] The lateral part of the lower belly.

He laid, and, pois'd in air, the jav'lin sent:
Through Paris shield the forceful weapon went,
His corset pierces, and his garment rends,
And glancing downward near his flank descends. Pope.

3. The side of any army or fleet.

Great ordnance and small shot thundered and showered upon our men from the rampier in front, and from the galleries that lay at sea in flank. Bacon's War with Spain.

The other half of the battle, and the whole flank of the rear, was closed by the carriages. Hayward.

Gray was appointed to stand on the left side, in such sort as he might take the flank of the enemy. Hayward.

To right and left the front Divided, and to either flank retir'd. Milnes.

4. [In fortification.] That part of the bastion which reaches from the curtain to the face, and defends the opposite face, the flank and the curtain. Harri.

To FLANK. v. a.

1. To attack the side of a battalion or fleet.

2. To be posted so as to overlook or command any pass on the side; to secure on the side.

With fates averse, against their king's command,
Arm'd on the right, and on the left they stand,
And flank the passage. Dryden.

By the rich scent we found our perfum'd prey:
Which, flank'd with rocks, did close in covert lay. Dryden.

FLANKER. n. f. [from flank.] A fortification jutting out so as to command the side of a body marching to the assault.

The Turks, discouraged with a loss of their fellows, and sore beaten by the Spaniards out of their flankers, were enforced to retire. Knox's History of the Turks.

He always vacant, always amiable,

Hopes thee of flatter'ing gables

Unmindful. Milton.

FLATTERER. n. f. [from flatter.] One who flatters; a fawner; a wheedler; one who endeavours to gain favour by pleasing flatteries.

When I tell him he hates flatterers,

He says he does; being then most flatter'd. Shakespeare.

Some praises proceed merely of flattery; and if he be an ordinary flatterer, he will have certain common attributes, which may serve every man: if he be a cunning flatterer, he will follow the arch flatterer, which is a man's self. But if he be an impudent flatterer, look wherein a man is conscious to himself that he is most defective, and is most out of countenance in himself, that will the flatterer entitle him to perforce. Bacon.

If we from wealth to poverty descend,

Want gives to know the flatterer from the friend. Dryden.

After treating her like a goddess, the husband sees her like a woman: what is still worse, the most abject flatterers degenerate into the greatest tyrants. Addison.

The publick should know this of your ladyship; yet whoever goes about to inform them, shall be censured for a flatterer. Swift.

FLATTERY. n. f. [from flatter; flaterie, French.] False praise; artful obsequiousness; adulation.

Minds, by nature great, are conscious of their greatness,

And hold it mean to borrow aught from flattery. Rom.

See pride for flattery makes demands. Pope.

See how they beg an alms of flattery!

They languish, O! support them with a lye. Young.

FLATULENCY. n. f. [from flatulent.]

1. Windiness; fullness of wind; turgescence by wind confined.

Vegetable substances contain a great deal of air, which expands itself, producing all the disorders of flatulency. Arbutnot.

2. Emptiness; vanity; levity; airiness.

Whether most of them are not the genuine derivations of the hypothesis they claim to, may be determined by any that considers the natural flatulency of that airy scheme of notions. Glasville.

FLATULENT. adj. [flatulentus, flatur, Latin.]

1. Turgid with air; windy.

Pease are mild and demulcent; but being full of aerial particles, are flatulent, when dissolved by digestion. Arbutnot.

Flatulent tumours are such as easily yield to the pressure of the finger; but readily return, by their elasticity, to a tumid state again: these are so light as scarce to be felt by the patient, and no otherwise incommodious than by their lightness or bulk. Quincy.

2. Empty; vain; big without substance or reality; puffy.

To talk of knowledge, from those few indistinct representations which are made to our grosser faculties, is a flatulent vanity. Glasville.

How many of these flatulent writers have sunk in their reputation, after seven or eight editions of their works. Lyden.

FLATUOSITY. n. f. [flatuosité, French; from flatur, Latin.]

Windiness; fullness of air.

The cause is flatulency; for wind stirred, moveth to expel; and all purgers have in them a raw spirit or wind, which is the principal cause of tension in the stomach and belly. Bacon.

FLATUOUS. adj. [from flatur, Latin.] Windy; full of wind.

Rhubarb in the stomach, in a small quantity, doth digest and overcome, being not flatuous nor loathsome; and it sendeth it to the mesenteric veins, and being opening, it helpeth down urine. Bacon.

FLATUS. n. f. [Latin.] Wind gathered in any cavities of the body, caused by indigestion and a gross internal perspiration; which is therefore dissipated by warm aromatics. Quincy.

Its posture in the earth was flatwise, and parallel to the site of the stratum in which it was repositied. Woodward.

To FLAUNT. v. n.

1. To make a fluttering show in apparel.

With ivy canopy'd, and interwove

With flaunting honeyfuckle.

Milton.

Their courtiers of applause deny themselves things convenient, to flaunt it out, being frequently enough fain to immortalize their own desires to their vanity.

Boyle.

Here, attir'd beyond our purise, we go,

For useless ornament and flaunting show :

We take on trust, in purple robes to shine,

And poor, are yet ambitious to be fine.

Dryden.

You sot, you loiter about alehouses, or flaunt about the streets in your new-gilt chariot, never minding me nor your numerous family.

Arbutnot.

2. To be hung with something loose and flying. This seems not to be proper.

Fortune in men has some small difference made ;

One flaunts in rags, one flutters in brocade.

*Pope.*FLAUNT. n. f. Any thing loose and airy.

How would he look to see his work so noble,

Wildly bound up, what would he say ! or how

Should I in these my borrow'd flaunts behold

The sternness of his presence !

*Shakespeare.*FLAVOUR. n. f.

2. To power of pleasing the taste.

They have a certain flavour, at their first appearance, from several accidental circumstances, which they may lose, if not taken early.

Addison.

2. Sweetness to the smell ; odour ; fragrance.

Myrtle, orange, and the blushing rose,

With bending heaps, to high their bloom disclose,

Each seems to smell the flavour which the other blows.

*Dry.*FLAVOUROUS. adj. [from flavour.]

1. Delightful to the palate.

Sweet grapes degen'rate there, and fruits declin'd

From their first flav'rous taste, renounce their kind.

Dryden.

2. Fragrant ; odoriferous.

FLAW. n. f. [Flaw, to break ; plow, Saxon, a fragment ;flaw, Dutch, broken in mind.]

1. A crack or breach in any thing.

This heart shall break into a thousand flaws,

Or ere I weep.

Shakespeare.

Wool, new-thorn, being laid casually upon a vessel of verjuice, after some time had drunk up a great part of the verjuice, though the vessel were whole, without any flaw, and had not the bungle hole open.

Bacon.

We found it exceeding difficult to keep out the air from getting in at any imperceptible hole or flaw.

Beyle.

A flaw is in thy ill-bak'd vessel found ;

'Tis hollow, and returns a jarring sound.

Dryden.

As if great Atlas, from his height,

Should sink beneath his heavenly weight ;

And with a mighty flaw the flaming wall, as once it shall,

Should gape immense, and, rushing down, o'erwhelm this neither ball.

Dryden.

Whether the nymph shall break Diana's law,

Or some frail China-jar receive a flaw.

Pope.

He that would keep his house in repair, must attend every little breach or flaw, and supply it immediately, else time alone will bring all to ruin.

Swift.

2. A fault ; defect.

Yet certain though it be, it hath flaws ; for that the scribes and brokers do value unfound men to serve their own turn.

Bacon.

Traditions were a proof alone,

Could we be certain such they were, so known :

But since some flaws in long descents may be,

'Tis make not truth, but probability.

Dryden.

And laid her dowry out in law,

To null her jointure with a flaw.

Hudibras.

Their judgment has found a flaw in what the generality of mankind admires.

Addison.

So many flaws had this vow in its first conception.

Atterb.

3. A sudden gust ; a violent blast. [from
- fla*
- , Latin.]

Being incens'd, he's flint ; his

As humorous as Winter, and as fudden

As flares congealed in the spring of day.

Shakespeare.

Oh, that that earth, which kept the winter in awe,

Should patch a wall, 't' expel the winter's flaw.

Shak.

As a huge fish, laid

Near to the cold weed-gathering shore, is with a north flaw

Shoots back ; so, sent against the ground,

Was foil'd Eurialus.

Chapman.

Burfling their brazen dungeon, arm'd with ice, And snow, and hail, and stormy gust, and flaw, Boreas, and Cæcias, and Argætes loud,

And Thralcias rend the woods, and seas upturn.

Milton.

I heard the rack,

As earth and sky would mingle ; but myself

Was distant ; and these flaws, though mortals fear them,

As dangerous to the pillar'd frame of heav'n,

Or to the earth's dark basis underneath,

Are to the main inconsiderable.

Milton.

4. A tumult ; a tempestuous uproar.

And this fell tempest shall not cease to rage,

Until the golden circuit on my head

Do calm the fury of this madbrain'd flaw.

Shak.

The fort's revolted to the emperor,

The gates are open'd, the portcullis drawn,

And deluges of armies from the town

Came pouring in : I heard the mighty flaw,

When first it broke, the crowding ensigns saw

Which choak'd the passage.

Dryden.

5. A sudden commotion of mind.

Oh these flaws and starts,

Impostors to true fear, would become

A woman's story at a winter's fire.

*Shakespeare.*To FLAW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To break ; to crack ; to damage with fissure.

But his flaw'd heart,

Alack, too weak the conflict to support,

'T'wixt two extremes of passion, joy and grief,

Burst smilingly.

Shakespeare.

The cup was flawed with such a multitude of little cracks, that it looks like a white, not like a crystalline cup.

Boyle.

The brazen caldrons with the froils are flaw'd,

The garment stiff with ice, at hearths is thaw'd.

Dryden.

2. To break ; to violate. Out of use.

France hath flaw'd the league, and hath attack'd

Our merchants goods.

TO FLE'CKER. v. a. [fligheren, Dutch; fliectionen, Saxon.]

To flutter; to play the wings; to have a fluttering motion.

Under th' allowance of your grand aspect,
Whose influence, like the wreath of radiant fire,
On flattering Phœbus' front. Shakespeare.

'Twas ebbing darkness, past the mid' of night,
And Phosphor, on the confines of the light,
Promis'd the sun, ere day began to spring;
The tuneful lark already stretch'd her wing,
And stick'ring on her nest, made short essays to sing. Dry.

At all her stretch her little wings she spread,
And with her feather'd arms embrac'd the dead;
Then flucting to his pallid lips, she strove
To print a kiss, the last essay of love. Dryden.

FLIER. n. f. [from fly.]

1. One that runs away; a fugitive; a runaway.

Can't thou from where they made the stand?
— I did;
Though you, it seems, came from the fierr. Shakespeare.

The gates are ope, now prove good seconds;
'Tis for the followers fortune widens them,
Not for the fierr. Shakespeare.

Now the fierr is from and forsakers of their places, carry the parliamentary power along with them. King Charles.

2. That part of a machine which, by being put into a more rapid motion than the other parts, equalizes and regulates the motion of the rest; as in a jack.

The fierr, tho't had leaden feet,
Turn'd so quick, you scarce could feet'. Swift.

FLIGHT. n. f. [from fly.]

1. The act of flying or running from danger.

And now, too late, he wishes for the flight,
That strength he wasted in ignoble flight.
He thinks by flight his mistress must be won,
And claims the prize because he best did run. Dryden.

As eager of the chase, the maid
Beyond the forest's verdant limits stray'd;
Pan saw and lov'd, and, burning with desire,

2. Removal to another place.

The fury sprang above the Stygian flood;
And on her wicker wings, sublime through night,
She to the Latian palace took her flight. Dryden.

3. The act of using wings; volation.

For he so swift and nimble was of flight,
That from this lower tract he dar'd to fly
Up to the clouds, and thence with pinions light
To mount aloft unto the crystal sky. Spenser.

Winds that tempests brew,
When through Arabian groves they take their flight,
Made wanton with rich odours, lose their spite. Dryden.

4. Removal.

4. Removal from place to place by means of wings.

Ere the bath flown

His cloyster'd, ight.

The tows shall take their flight away together.

Fourty, by winter force d, to fake the floods,
And wing their hasty flight to happier lands.

5. A flock of birds flying together.

Flights of angels wing thee to thy rest.

They take great pride in the feathers of birds; and this they took from their ancestors of the mountains, who were invited unto it by the infinite flights of birds that come up to the high grounds

I can at will, doubt not,

Command a table in this wilderness;
And call swift flights of angels ministrant,

Array'd in glory, on my cup I attend.

6. The birds produced in the same season: as, the harvest flight of pigeons.

7. A volley; a shower; as much shot as is discharged at once.

At the first flight of arrows feist,

Full threecore Scots they flew.

Above an hundred arrows discharged on my left hand, pricked me like so many needles; and beside they shot another flight into the air, as we do bombs.

8. The f, ease pass by flying.

9. Heat of imagination; fully of the soul.

Old Pindar's flights by him are reacht,

When on that gale his wings are stretcht.

He flew all the stretch of fancy at once; and if he has failed in some of his flights, it was but because he was tempted every thing.

Strange graces still, and stranger flights he had;

Was just not ugly, and was just not mad.

Trust me, dear! good humour can prevail,

When airs and flights, and screams and scolding fail.

10. Excursion on the wing.

If there were any certain height where the flights of ambition end, one might imagine that the interest of France were but to conserve its present greatness.

It is not only the utmost pitch of impiety, but the highest flight of folly, to deride their things.

11. The power of flying.

In my school days, when I had lost one shaft,

I shot his fellow of the self-same flight

The self-same way.

FLIGHTY, adj. [from flight.]

1. Fleeting; swift.

Time, thou anticipat'st my dread exploits:

The fl, by purpose never is o'ertook,

Unless the deed go with it.

2. Wild; full of imagination.

FLIMSY, adj. [Of this word I know not any original, and suspect it to have crept into our language from the cant of manufacturers.]

1. Weak; feeble; without strength of texture.

2. Mean; spiritless; without force.

Proud of a vast extent of flimsy lines.

TO FLIN, v. n. [corrupted from fling. Skinner.]

1. To shrink from any suffering or undertaking; to withdraw from any pain or danger.

Every martyr could keep one eye steadily fixed upon immortality, and look death and danger out of countenance with the other; nor did they flinch from duty, for fear of martyrdom.

A child, by a constant course of kindness, may be accustomed to bear very rough usage without flinching or complaining.

Oh ingratitude, that John Bull, whom I have honoured with my friendship, should flinch at last, and pretend that he can disturb no more money.

2. In Shakespeare it signifies to fail.

If I break time, or flinch in property

Of what I spoke, unpunished let me die.

FLINCHER, n. f. [from the verb.] He who shrinks or fails in any matter.

TO FLING, preter. flung; part. flung or flong. v. a. [from fige, Latin, Slancir: according to others from flying; so to fling is to set flying.]

1. To cast from the hand; to throw.

The matrons flung their gloves,

Ladies and maids their scarfs and handkerchiefs

Upon him.

'Tis fate that flings the dice; and as the flings,

Of kings makes peasants, and of peasants kings.

2. To dart, to cast with violence.

How much unlike that Hector who return'd

Clad in Achilles' spoils; when he, among

A thousand ships, like Jove, his lightning flung.

3. To scatter.

Every beam new transient colours flings,

Colours that change when'er they wave their wings.

4. To drive by violence.

A heap of rocks, falling, would expel the waters out of their places with such a violence as to fling them among the highest clouds.

5. To move forcibly.

The knight seeing his habitation reduced to so small compass, ordered all the apartments to be flung open.

6. To eject; to dismiss.

Cromwell, I charge thee fling away ambition;

By that sin fell the angels.

7. To cast reproach.

I know thy gen'rous temper:

Flung but th' appearance of dishonour on it,

It straight takes fire.

8. To force into another condition, properly into a worse.

Squalid fortune, into baseness flung,

Doth scorn the pride of wonted ornaments.

9. TO FLING down. To demolish; to ruin.

These are so far from railing mountains, that they overturn and fling down some of those which were before flung.

10. TO FLING off. To baffle in the chase; to defeat at a prey.

These men are too well acquainted with the chase to be flung off by any false steps or doubles.

- TO FLING*, v. n.

1. To bounce; to wince; to fly into violent and impetuous motions.

The angry beast

Began to kick, and fling, and wince,

As if he had been beside his sense.

Their consciences are galled by it, and this makes them

wince and fling as if they had some mende.

2. TO FLING out. To grow unruly or outrageous; from the act of any angry horic that throws out his legs.

Duncan's horics,

Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out,

Contending 'gainst obedience.

FLING, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A throw; a cast.

2. A gibe; a sneer; a contemptuous remark.

No little fribbler is of wit to bare,

But has his fling at the poor wedded pair.

I, who love to have a fling

Both at senate-house and king,

Thought no method more commodious

Than to show their vices odious.

FLINGER, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. He who throws.

2. He who jeers.

FLINT, n. f. [flintz, Saxon.]

1. A semi-pellucid stone, composed of crystal debris, of a blackish grey, of one similar and equal substance, but free veins, and naturally invested with a whitish crust. It is sometimes smooth and equal, more frequently rough; in fact various. It is well known to strike fire with steel. It is useful in glassmaking.

Searching the window for a flint, I found

This paper.

Love melts the rigour which the rocks have bred;

A flint will break upon a featherbed.

There is the same force and the same refreshing force to fire kindled by a spark from a flint, as if it were kindled by a beam from the sun.

Take this, and lay your flint edge'd weapon by.

I'll fetch quick fuel from the neighbouring wood.

And strike the sparkling flint, and dress the load.

2. Any thing eminently or proverbially hard.

Your tears, a heart of flint

Might tender make.

Throw my heart

Against the flint and hardness of my fault.

FLINTY, adj. [from flint.]

1. Made of flint; strong.

Tyrant custom

Hath made the flinty and steel couch of war

My thrice-driven bed of down.

A pointed flinty rock, all bare and black,

Grew gibbous from behind the mountain's back.

2. Full of stones.

The gathering up of flints in flinty ground, and laying them on heaps, is no good husbandry.

3. Hard of heart; cruel; savage; inexorable.

I did him a desired office,

Dear almost as his life; which gratified,

Through flinty Tartar's bosom, would sweep forth

And answer thanks.

FLIPP, n. f. [A cant word.] A liquor much used in flipping by mixing beer with spirits and sugar.

The tarpawlin and swabber is selling at Malaga, with some drunken sunburnt whore, over a can of flipp.

FLIPPANT, adj. [A word of no great authority, probably derived from flipp.]

FLI

1. Nimble; moveable. It is used only of the act of speech.
An excellent anatomist promised to dissect a woman's tongue, and examine whether there may not be in it certain juices, which render it so wonderfully voluble or flippant. Addison.
2. Pert; talkative.
Away with flippant epilogues. Thomson.
- FLIPFANTLY. adv. [from the adjective.] In a flowing parting way.

- FLIRTATION. n. f. [from flirt.] A quick sprightly motion.
A cant word among women.
A mullin rounce, made very full, would give a very agreeable flirtation air. Pope.
- FLIT. v. n. [from To fleet; or from fitter, Danish, to remove.]
1. To fly away.
Likest it seemeth, in my simple wit,
Unto the fair sunshine in summer's day,
That when a dreadful storm away is flit,
Through the broad world doth spread his goodly ray. Spenser.
His grudging ghost did strive
With the frail feth; at last it flitted is,
Whither the souls do die of men that live amiss. Spenser.
2. To remove; to migrate. In Scotland it is still used for removing from one place to another at quarter-day, or the usual term.
So hardly he the flitted life does win,
Unto her native prison to return. Spenser.
It became a received opinion that the souls of men, departing this life, did fit out of one body into some other. Hosier.
3. To flutter; to rove on the wing.
He made a glancing shot, and mis'd the dove;
Yet mis'd so narrow, that he cut the cord
Which fasten'd, by the foot, the flitting bird. Dryden.
Fear the just Gods, and think of Scylla's fate!
Chang'd to a bird, and sent to fit in air. Pope.
4. To be flux or unstable.
Himself up high he lifted from the ground,
And with strong flight did forcibly divide
The yielding air, which nigh too feeble found
Her fitting parts, and element unbound. Spenser.
He slept at once the passage of his wind,
And the free soul to flitting air resign'd. Dryden.
- FLIT. adj. [from fleet.] Swift; nimble; quick.
And in his hand two darts exceeding fit,
And deadly sharp, he held; whose heads were dight
In poison and in blood, of malice and despoight. Spenser.
- FLITCH. n. f. [flitche, Saxon; fische, Danish; fische, fische, French. S. inner.] The side of a hog salted and cured.
But heretofore 'twas thought a tumpuous feast,
On birthdays, festivals, or days of state,
A salt dry fit of bacon to prepare;
If they had fresh meat, 'twas delicious fare. Dryden.
While he from out the chimney took
A fit of bacon off the hook,
Cut out large slices to be fry'd. Swift.
He sometimes accompanies the present with a fit of bacon. Addison.

of wood or stone; the part on which one treads.
His stepmother, making all her gestures counterfeit afflic-tion, lay almost groveling upon the floor of her chamber. Sidon.

He rent that iron door
With furious force, and indignation fell;
Where entered in, his foot could find no floor.
But all a deep descent is dark as hell. Spenser.

Look how the floor of heav'n
Is thick inlay'd with patens of bright gold:
There's not the smallest orb which thou beholdest,
But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quivering to the young ey'd cherubims. Shaksp.
The ground lay strewn with pikes so thick as a floor is usually strewn with rushes. Hayward.

He winnoweth barley to-night in the threshing floor. Ruth.

Flouriſh the ſword, and at the plaſtron puſh. Dryden.

5. To adorn with embellishments of language; to grace with eloquence offentiaſly diffuſive.

We ſhould add the labours of Hercules, though flouriſh'd with much fabulous matter; yet it doth notably ſet forth the content of all nations and ages in the approbation of the ex-ticipating and debellating giants, monſters and tyrants. Bacon.

6. To adorn; to embellish; to grace.

To bring you thus together, 'tis no fin,
Siſt that the juſtice of your title to him
Doth flouriſh the deceit. Shakſpeare.

FLOURISH. n. ſ. [from the verb.]

1. Bravery; beauty.

I call'd thee then vain flouriſh of my fortune;
I call'd thee then poor ſhadow, painted queen,
The preſentation of but what I was. Shakſpeare.

The flouriſh of his ſober youth,
Was the pride of naked truth. Craſſaw.

2. An offentiaſy embellishment; ambitious copiouſneſs; farſetched elegance.

This is a flouriſh: there follow excellent parables. Bacon.
We can excuſe the duty of our knowledge, if we only beſtow the flouriſh of poetry thereon, or thoſe commendatory conceits which popularly ſet forth the eminence of this creature.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The apprehenſion is ſo deeply rivetted into my mind, that ſuch rhetorical flouriſhes cannot at all looſen or bruſh it out.
Mare.

Villanies have not the ſame countenance, when there are great intereſts, pleaſible colours, and flouriſhes of wit and rhetoric interpoſed between the light and the object. L'Eſtrange.

The ſo much repeated ornament and flouriſh of their former ſpeeches was commonly the trueſt word they ſpoke, tho' leaſt believed by them. South.

Studious to pleaſe the genius of the times,
With periods, points, and tropes he flurs his crimes;
He lards with flouriſhes his long harangue;

'Tis fine, ſay'ſt thou; what to be praiſ'd, and hang? Dryd.

3. Figures formed by lines curiouſly or wantonly drawn.
A child with delight looks upon emblems finely drawn and painted, and takes ſome pleaſure in beholding the neat cha-Nº LVI.

acters and flouriſhes of a bible curiouſly printed. Boyle.
They were intended only for ludicrous ornaments of nature, like the flouriſhes about a great letter that ſignify nothing, but are made only to delight the eye. Mare.
FLOURISHER. n. ſ. [from flouriſh.] One that is in print or in proſperity.

They count him of the green-hair'd eld, they may, or in his flow'r;

Oh that thou wouldſt rent the heavens, that the mountains might flow down at thy preſence. Iſ. lxxiv. 1.

4. To proceed; to iſſue.

I'll ſe that tongue I have: if wit flow from 't,

I ſhall do good. Shakſpeare.

The knowledge drawn from experience is quite of another kind from that which flows from ſpeculation or diſcourſe. South.

5. To glide ſmoothly without aſperity: as, a flowing period.

This diſcourſe of Cyprian, and the flowers of rhetoric in it, ſew him to have been of a great wit and flowing eloquence. Hatwell.

6. To write ſmoothly; to ſpeak volubly.

Virgil is ſweet and flowing in his hexameters. Dryden.

Did ſweeter ſounds adorn my flowing tongue

Than ever man pronounc'd, or angel ſung. Prior.

7. To abound; to be crowded.

The dry ſtreets flow'd with men. Chapman.

He was cloathed in a flowing mantle of green filk, interwoven with flowers. Spenser.

TO FLOW. v. a. To overflow; to deluge.

In a hot dry Summer watering would be a very great advantage to hops; but it is ſcarce practicable, unleſs you have a ſtream at hand to flow the ground. Merrimer.

FLOW. n. ſ. [from the verb.]

1. The riſe of water; not the ebb.

Some, from the diurnal and annual motion of the earth, endeavour to ſolve the flows and motions of theſe ſeaſ, illuſtrating the ſame by water in a bowl, that riſes or falls according to the motion of the veſſel. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The ebb of tides, and their myſterious flow,

We as arts elements ſhall underſtand. Dryden.

2. A ſudden plenty or abundance.

The noble power of ſuffering bravely is as far above that 9 K of

of enterprising greatly, as an unblemished conscience and inflexible resolution are above an accidental flow of spirits, or a sudden tide of blood. P. ps.

3. A stream of diction; volubility of tongue.

Teaching is not a flow of words, nor the draining of an hour-glass; but an effectual procuring that a man know something which he knew not before, or to know it better. Scath.

FLOWER. n. f. [fleur, French; flos, floris, Latin.]

1. The part of a plant which contains the seeds.

Such are reckoned perfect flowers which have petala, a stamen, apex and stylus; and whatever flower wants either of these is reckoned imperfect. Perfect flowers are divided into simple ones, which are not composed of other smaller ones, and which usually have but one single style; and compounded, which consist of many foeculi, all making but one flower. Simple flowers are monopetalous, which have the body of the flower all of one intire leaf, though sometimes cut or divided a little way into many seeming petala, or leaves; as in borage, bugloss, &c. or polypetalous, which have distinct petala, and those falling off singly, and not all together, as the seeming petala of monopetalous flowers always do: but those are further divided into uniform and difform flowers: the former have their right and left hand parts, and the forward and backward parts all alike; but the difform have no such regularity, as in the flowers of sage, deadnettle, &c. A monopetalous difform flower is likewise further divided into, first, semi-fittular, whose upper part resembles a pipe cut off obliquely, as in the ariloftochia: 2d, labiate; and this either with one lip only, as in the acanthum and cordium, or with two lips, as in the far greater part of the labiate flowers: and here the upper lip is sometimes turned upwards, and so turns the convex part downwards, as in the chamæcissus, &c. but most commonly the upper lip is convex above, and turns the hollow part down to its fellow below, and so represents a kind of helmet, or monkhood; and from thence these are frequently called galeate, cucullate, and galeuliculate flowers; and in this form are the flowers of the lamium, and most verticillate plants. Sometimes also the lamium is intire, and sometimes jagged or divided. 3d, Coriaceous; that is, such hollow flowers as have on their upper part a kind of spur, or little horn, as in the linaria, delphinium, &c. and the carunculum, or calcar, is always impervious at the tip or point. Compounded flowers are either, first, discous or discoidal; that is, whose foeculi are set together to clofe, thick, and even, as to make the surface of the flower plain and flat, which therefore, because of its round form, will be like a discus; which disk is sometimes radiated, when there is a row of petala standing round in the disk, like the points of a star, as in the matricaria, chamæmelum, &c. and sometimes naked, having no such radiating leaves round the limb of its disk, as in the tanacetum: 2d, planifolious, which is composed of plain flowers, set together in circular rows round the centre, and whose face is usually indented, notched uneven and jagged, as the hieracia, &c. 3d, fittular, which is compounded of many long hollow little flowers, like pipes, all divided into large jags at the ends. Imperfect flowers, because they want the petala, are called stameneous, apetalous, and capillaceous; and those which hang pendulous by fine threads, like the july, are by Tournefort called amentaceous, and we call them cat-tail. The term campaniformis is used for such as are in the shape of a bell, and infundibuliformis for such as are in the form of a funnel. Miller.

Good men's lives

Expire before the flowers in their caps,
Dying ere they ficken. Shakspeare.

With flow'r inwoven tresses torn,

The nymphs in twilight shade of tangled thickets mourn. Milton.

Beauteous flow'rs why do we spread

Upon the monuments of the dead? Cowley.

Though the same sun with all-diffusive rays

Blush in the rose and in the diamond blaze,

We praise the stronger effort of his power,

And always set the gem above the flower. Pope.

If the blossom of the plant be of most importance, we call it a flower; such are daisies, tulips, and carnations. Watts.

2. An ornament; an embellishment.

This discourse of Cyprian, and the excellent flowers of rhetoric in it, threw him to have been a sweet and powerful orator. Haleswell.

Truth needs no flow'rs of speech. Pope.

3. The prime; the flourishing part.

Alas! young man, your days can ne'er be long:

In flow'r of age you perish for a long. Pope.

4. The edible part of corn; the meal.

The bread I would have in flowers, so as it might be baked still to serve their necessary want. Spenser.

I can make my audit up, that all

From me do back receive the flow'r of all,

And leave me but the bran. Shakspeare.

The flowers of grains, mixed with water, will make a sort of glue. Arbuthnot.

But by thy care twelve urns of wine be fill'd,
Next these in worth, and firm those urns be seal'd;
Be twice ten measures of the choicest flour,
Prepar'd, ere yet descends the evening hour. Pope.

5. The most excellent or valuable part of any thing; quittance.

The choice and flower of all things profitable the Psalm do more briefly contain, and more movingly express, by reason of their poetical form. Heber.

Thou hast slain

The flower of Europe for his chivalry. Shakspeare.

The French monarchy is exhausted of its bravest subjects: the flower of the nation is consumed in its wars. Adieu.

6. That which is most distinguished for any thing valuable. He is not the flower of courtesy; but, I warrant him, as gentle as a lamb. Shakspeare.

FLOWER DE LUCE. n. f. A bulbous iris.

It hath a lily flower of one leaf, shaped like that of the common iris: the pointal has three leaves, and the empointment turns to a fruit shaped like that of the common iris. Its root is bulbous. Milner specifies thirty-four species of this plant; and among them the Persian flower de luce is greatly esteemed for the sweetness and beauty of its variegated flowers, which are in perfection in February, or the beginning of March.

Crop'd are the flower de lues in your arms;

Of England's coat one half is cut away. Shakspeare.

The iris is the flower de luce. Palm.

TO FLOW'ER. v. n. [fleurir, French, or from the noun.]

1. To be in flower; to be in blossom; to bloom; to put forth flowers.

So forth they marched in this goodly fort,

To take the solace of the open air,

And in fresh flowering fields themselves to sport. Spenser.

Sacred hill, whose head full high,

Is, as it were, for endless memory

Of that dear Lord, who oft thereon was found,

For ever with a flowering garland crown'd. Spenser.

Then herbs of every leaf, that sudden flow'r'd,

Opening their various colours. Milner.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood,

If odorous blooms the bearing branches load. Dray.

To leafless shrubs the flow'ring palms succeed,

And odorous myrtle to the noisome weed. Pope.

2. To be in the prime; to flourish.

Whilome in youth, when flow'r'd my youthful days,

Like swallow swift, I there and there; Spenser.

For heat of headless lust me did so fling,

That I of doubted danger had no fear. Spenser.

This cause detain'd me all my flow'ring youth,

Within a loathsome dungeon there to pine. Shakspeare.

3. To froth; to ferment; to mantle, as new bottled beer.

Those above water were the best, and that beer flow'r'd best:

A little; whereas that under water did not, though it was fresh. Re.

An extreme clarification doth spread the spirits so leechy that they become dull, and the drink dead, which ought to have a little flow'ring. Re.

4. To come as cream from the surface.

If you can accept of these few observations, which here

flow'r'd off, and are, as it were, the burning of many tedious and contemplative years, I here give you them in dispose of. Re.

TO FLOW'ER. v. a. [from the noun.] To adorn with florid or imitated flowers.

FLOW'ERAGE. n. f. [from flower.] Store of flowers. Dict.

FLOW'ERET. n. f. [fleur, French.] A flower; a small flower.

Sometimes her head she fondly would agild

With gaudy garlands, or fresh flow'rets dight, Spenser.

About her neck, or rings of rushes plight.

No more shall trenching war channel her fields,

Nor bruise her flow'rets with the armed hoofs Shakspeare.

Of hostile pack.

That same dew, which sometime on the bud

Was wont to swell, like round and orient pearls,

Stood now within the pretty flower's eyes, Shakspeare.

Like tears that did their own disgrace bewail.

So to the sylvan lodge

They came, that like Pomona's arbour smil'd, Milner.

With flow'rets deck'd, and fragrant smil'd.

'Tis laughs the childish year with flow'rets cover'd,

And lavishly perfumes the fields around;

But no substantial nourishment receives, Drake.

Infirm the stalks, unfold are the leaves.

FLOW'ERGARDEN. n. f. [flower and garden.] A garden in which flowers are principally cultivated,

Observing that this manner produced flowers in the field, I made my gardener try those shells in his flower-garden, and never saw better carnations or flowers. Milner.

FLOW'ERINESS. n. f. [from flower.]

1. The state of abounding in flowers.

2. Floridness of speech.

FLOWERINGBRUSH. n. f. A plant.

The leaves are triangular and grassy, the stalks naked, and the flowers disposed in an umbella upon the top of the stalk, each consisting of six leaves: three of them are large, and three small, which are expanded in form of a rose. Miller.

FLOWERY. adj. [from flower.] Full of flowers; adorned with flowers real or fictitious.

My mother Circe, with the fiends three,
Amidst the flow'ry kind's Naïades. Milton.

Day's harbingers
Comes dancing from the East, and leads with her
The flow'ry May, who from her green lap throws
The yellow cowslip and the pale primrose. Milton.

O'er his fair limbs a flow'ry veil he threw,
To her the shady grove, the flow'ry field, Pope.

The streams and fountains, no delight could yield. Pope.

FLOWINGLY. adv. [from flow.] With volubility; with abundance.

FLOWK. n. f. [see flow, Scott.] A flounder; the name of a fish. Amongst these the flowk, sole, and plaice follow the tide up into the fresh waters. Carew.

FLOWKWOOT. n. f. The name of a plant.

FLOWN. Participle of fly, or flie, they being confounded.

1. Gone away.

For those,
Appointed to sit there, had left their charge,
Flown to the upper world. Milton.

Where, my deluded sense! was reason flown?
Where the high majesty of David's throne? Prior.

2. Puffed; inflated; elate.

And when night
Darkens the streets, then wander forth the fons
Of Belial, flown with insolence and wine. Milton.

FLUCTUANT. adj. [from fluere, Lat.] Wavering; uncertain. To be longing for this thing to-day, and for that thing to-morrow; to change likings for loathings, and to stand with- ing and hankering at a venture, how is it possible for any man to be at rest in this fluctuant wandering humour and opinion? L'Estrange.

FLUCTUATE. v. n. [from fluere, Latin.]

1. To roll to and v. in water in agitation.

The fluctuating fields of liquid air,
With all the curious meteors hovering there,
And the wide regions of the land, proclaim
The Pow'r Divine, that rais'd the mighty frame. Blackmore.

2. To float backward and forward, as with the motion of water.

3. To move with uncertain and hasty motion.

The tempter
New part puts on; and, as to passion mov'd, Fluctuates diffus'd. Milton.

4. To be in an uncertain state; to feel sudden vicissitudes.

As the greatest part of my estate has been hitherto of an unsteady and volatile nature, either tost upon seas, or fluctuating in funds, it is now fixed and settled in substantial acres and tenements. Addison.

5. To be irresolute; to be undetermined.

FLUCTUATION. n. f. [from fluere, Latin; fluctuation, French, from fluere.]

1. The alternate motion of the water.

Its fluctuations are but motions subservient, which winds, storms, shores, shelves, and every interagency irregulates. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

They were caused by the impulses and fluctuation of water in the bowels of the earth. Woodward.

2. Uncertainty; indetermination.

It will not hinder it from making a profelyte of a person, that loves fluctuation of judgment little enough to be willing to be eased of it by any thing but error. Boyle.

FLUZ. n. f. [A word of which I know not the etymology, unless it be derived from flue of fly.]

1. A small pipe or chimney to convey air, heat, or smoke.

2. Soft down or fur, such as may fly in the wind.

FLUELLIN. n. f. The herb SPEEDWILL.

FLUEVENCY. n. f. [from fluere.]

1. The quality of flowing; smoothness; freedom from harshness or asperity.

Fluency of numbers, and most expressive figures for the poet, morals for the serious, and pleasantries for admirers of points of wit. Garth.

2. Readiness; copiousness; volubility.

Our publick liturgy must be cashiered, the better to please those men who gloried in their extemporary vein and fluency. King Charles.

Th' unthinking victors vainly boast their pow'r;
Be their's the maquet, while the tongue is ours:
We reason with such fluency and fire,
The beaux we baffle, and the learned tire. Tickell.

The common fluency of speech in many men, and most women, is owing to a scarcity of matter, and a scarcity of words; for whoever is a master of language, and hath a mind full of ideas, will be apt, in speaking, to hesitate upon the choice of both. Swift.

3. Affluence; abundance. This sense is obsolete.

Those who grow old in fluency and ease,
Behold him tost on seas. Sandys.

God riches and renown to men imparts,
Even all they wish; and yet their narrow hearts
Cannot so great a fluency receive,
But their fruition to a stranger leave. Sandys.

FLUENT. adj. [from fluere, Latin.]

1. Liquid.

It is not malleable; but yet is not fluent, but stupified. Bacon.

2. Flowing; in motion; in flux.

Motion being a fluent thing, and one part of its duration being absolutely independent upon another, it doth not follow that because any thing moves this moment, it must necessarily continue to do so the next. Ray.

3. Ready; copious; voluble.

Those have fine natural dispositions, which have better grace in youth than in age, such as is a fluent and luxurious speech. Bacon.

I shall lay before you all that's within me,
And with most fluent utterance. Denham.

FLUENT. n. f. Stream; running water.

Confiding in their hands, that sed'ulous strive
To cut th' outrageous fluent; in this distress,
E'en in the sight of death. Philips.

FLUID. adj. [from fluere, Latin; fluide, French.] Having partially separable; not solid.

Or serve they as a flow'ry verge to bind
The fluid skirts of that same wat'ry cloud,
Left it again dissolve, and show'r the earth? Milton.

If particles slip easily, and are of a fit size to be agitated by heat, and the heat is big enough to keep them in agitation, the body is fluid; and if it be apt to stick to things, it is hu-mid. Newton.

FLUID. n. f. [In physics.] Any animal juice: as the blood.

Consider how luxury hath introduced new diseases, and with them, not improbably, altered the whole course of the fluids. Arbutnot and Pope's Mari. Scrib.

FLUIDITY. n. f. [from fluere, Fr. from fluere.] The quality in bodies opposite to solidity; want of adherence between the parts.

Heat promotes fluidity very much, by diminishing the tenacity of bodies: it makes many bodies fluid, which are not fluid in cold, and increases the fluidity of tenuous liquids; as of oil, balsam and honey; and thereby decreases their resistance.

A disease opposite to this fluidity is too great fluidity. Arb.

FLUIDNESS. n. f. [from fluere.] That quality in bodies opposite to stability.

What if we should say that fluidity and stability depends so much upon the texture of the parts, that, by the change of that texture, the same parts may be made to constitute either a fluid or a dry body, and that permanently too? Boyle.

FLUMMERY. n. f. A kind of food made by coagulation of wheat-flower or oatmeal.

Milk and flummery are very fit for children. Locke.

FLUNG. participle and preterite of fling. Thrown; cast.

Several statues the Komans themselves flung into the river, when they would revenge themselves. Addison.

FLUOR. n. f. [Latin.]

1. A fluid fate.

The particles of fluids which do not cohere too strongly, and are of such a smallness as renders them most susceptible of those agitations which keep liquors in a flux, are most easily separated and rarified into vapours. Newton.

2. Catastrophe.

FLURRY. n. f.

1. A gust or storm of wind; a hasty blast.

The boat was overtaken by a sudden flurry from the North. Gulliver's Travels.

2. To flow with violence.

The pulse of the heart he attributes to an ebullition and sudden expansion of the blood in the ventricles, after the manner of the milk, which, being heated to such a degree, doth suddenly, and all at once, flush up and run over the vessel. Ray.

It flushes violently out of the cock for about a quart, and then stops. Martimer.

2. To come in haste.

If the place but affords
Any store of lucky birds,
As I make 'em to flush,
Each owl out of his bush. Ben. Johnson.

3. To glow in the skin; to produce a colour in the face by a sudden afflux of blood.

Ere yet the fall of most unrighteous tears
Had left the flushing in her gauled eyes,
She married. Shakespeare.

Thus Eve with countenance blithe her story told,
But in her cheek diffused a flushing glow'd. Milton.

What can be more significant than the sudden flushing and confusion of a blush? Collier.

What

FLU

- What means that lovely fruit? What means, alas!
That blood, which flushes guilty in your face? Dryden.
- At once, array'd
In all the colours of the flushing year,
The garden glows. Thomson.
4. To shine. Obsolete.
A flake of fire, that flushing in his beard,
Him all amaz'd. Spenser.
- TO FLUSH. v. a.
1. To colour; to redden.
The glowing dames of Zama's royal court,
Have faces flush'd with more exalted charms. Addison.

A prosperous people, flushed with great victories and successes, are rarely known to confine their joys within the bounds of moderation and innocence. Atterbury.
- FLUSH. adj.
1. Fresh; full of vigour.
He took my father grossly, full of bread,
With all his crimes broad blown, and flush as May;
And how his audit stands, who knows, save heav'n? Shak.
I love to wear cloths that are flush,
Not preface old rags with plumb. Cleveland.
2. Affluent; abounding. A cant word.
Lord Strut was not very flush in ready, either to go to law or clear old debts; neither could he find good bail. Arbutnot.
- FLUSH. n. f.
1. Afflux; sudden impulse; violent flow.
Never had any man such a loss, cries a widower, in the flush of his extravagancies for a dead wife. L'Estrange.
The pulse of the arteries is not only caud by the pulsation of the heart, driving the blood through them in manner of a wave or flush, but by the coats of the arteries themselves. Ray.
Success may give him a present flush of joy; but when the transport is over, the apprehension of losing succeeds. Reggers.
2. Cards all of a sort.
TO FLUSTER. v. a. [from To flush.] To make hot and rosy with drinking; to make half drunk.
Three lads of Cyprus, noble swelling spirits,
Have I to-night flusher'd with flowing cups,
And they watch too. Shakspere.
- FLUTE. n. f. [flute, flute, French; fugate, Dutch.]
1. A musical pipe; a pipe with stops for the fingers.
Th' oars were silver,
Which to the tune of flutes stroke. Shakspere.
The soft complaining flute
In dying notes discovers
The woes of hopeless lovers,
Whose dirge is whisper'd by the warbling lute. Dryden.
2. A channel or furrow in a pillar, like the concave of a flute split.
TO FLUTE. v. a. To cut columns into hollows.
TO FLUTTER. v. n. [fluteren, Saxon; flutter, French.]
1. To take short flights with great agitation of the wings.
As an eagle stirrith up her nest, fluttereth over her young, and spreadeth abroad her wings, so the Lord alone did lead him. Dante.
- One that gladly will be nigh,
To wait upon each morning-fligh;
To flutter in the balmy air
Of your well-perfumed pray'r. Craibour.
They fed, and, flut'ring, by degrees withdrew. Dryden.
2. To move about with great show and bustle without consequence.
Excess muddies the best wit, and only makes it flutter and froth high. Greus.
No rag, no scrap of all the beau wit,
That once so flut'ter'd, and that once so writ.
3. To be moved with quick vibrations or undulations:
Ye spirits! to your charge repair;
The flut'ring fan be Zephyretta's care.
They the tall mast above the vessel rear,
Or teach the flut'ring sail to float in air. Pope.
4. To be in agitation; to move irregularly; to be in a state of uncertainty.
The relation being brought him what a glorious victory was got, and with what difficulty, and how long the flutted upon the wings of doubtful success, he was not surprised. Hewel's Vocal Persif.
It is impossible that men should certainly discover the agreement or disagreement of ideas, whilst their thoughts flutter about, or stick only in founts of doubtful signification. Lacks.
Effem we these, my friend! event and chance,
Produc'd by atoms from their flutring dance! Priss.
Some never arrive at any deep, solid, or valuable knowledge, because they are perpetually fluttering over the surface of things. Watts.
His thoughts are very fluttering and wandering, and cannot be fixed attentively to a few ideas successively. Watts.

He might fashionably and genteelly have been fluxed or fluxed into any world. South.
- FLUXILITY. n. f. [fluxus, Latin.] Elasticity of separation of parts; possibility of liquefaction.
Experiments seem to teach, that the supposed fluxility of nature to a vacuum is but accidental, or in consequence, partly of the weight and fluidity, or at least fluxility of the bodies here below. Boyle.
- FLUXION. n. f. [fluxus, Latin.]
1. The act of flowing.
2. The matter that flows.
3. [In mathematics.] The arithmetick or analysis of infinitely small variable quantities; or it is the method of finding an infinite small or infinitely small quantity, which, kept upon an infinite number of times, becomes equal to a quantity. Horric.
- A penetration into the abstruse difficulties and depths of modern algebra and fluxions, are not worth the labour of those who design the learned professions as the business of life. Warren.
- TO FLY. pret. flew or fled; part. fled or flown. v. n. [phlegon, Saxon.] To fly is properly to use wings, and gives rise to flum. To fly is to escape, or go away, pleas, Saxon, and makes fled. They are now confounded.
1. To move through the air with wings.
Ere the bat hath flown Shakspere.
His cloister'd flight,
Fowl that may fly above the earth in the open firmament of heaven. Gowls.
These men's hallinies the warier sort of you do not commend; ye with they had held themselves longer in, and not flown so dangerously abroad before the feathers of the eagle had been grown. Hawes.
2. To pass through the air.
Man is born unto trouble, as the sparks fly upward. Jeh.
3. To pass away.
Ev'n a romance, a tune, a rhyme,
Help thee to pass the tedious time,
Which else would on thy hand remain;
Though flown, it ne'er looks back again. Pier.
4. To pass swiftly.
The scouts with fling speed
Return, and through the city spread the news. Dante.
Earth rolls back beneath the fling flood. Pope.

5. To spring with violence; to fall on suddenly.

A servant that he brew, thrill'd with remorse;
Oppos'd against the act, bending his sword
To his great master, who, threat'ning enrag'd, Flew on him, and amongst them fell'd him dead. Shak.
Though the dogs have never seen the dog-killer, yet they will come forth, and bark and fly at him. Bacon.
No honour, no fortune, can keep a man from being misfe-rable, when an enraged conscience shall fly at him, and take him by the throat. South.

6. To move with rapidity.

Glad to catch this good occasion,
Most thoroughly to be winnow'd, where my chaff
And corn shall fly asunder. Shakespeare.
A fair example to his master gave;
He baffles heads, to save his own, made fly;
And now, the Sultan to perceive, must die. Waller.

7. To burst asunder with a sudden explosion.

Behold, a frothy substance rise;
Be cautious, or your bottle flies. Swift.

8. To break; to shiver.

9. [clean, Saxon; fliehen, German.] To run away; to attempt escape. [In this sense the verb is properly to fly, when fled is formed; but the following examples shew that they are confounded.]

Which when the valiant elf perceiv'd, he leapt,
As lion fierce, upon the flying prey. Spenser.
Macduff is fled to England. Shakespeare.
Ye shall flee, as ye fled from before the earthquake. Lechaniab.

Abiathar escaped, and fled after David.
What wonder if the stied beams he shed,
Reviv'd the drooping arts again;
If science rais'd her head,
And soft humanity, that from rebellion fled.

He oft desir'd to fly from Israel's throne,
And live in shades with her and love alone. Prier.
I'll fly from shepherds, flocks, and flow'ry plains;
From shepherds, flocks, and plains I may remove,
Forake mankind, and all the world but love. Pope.

10. To FLY in the face. To insult.

This would discourage any man from doing you good; when you will either neglect him, or fly in his face; and he must expect only danger to himself. Swift.

11. To act in defiance.

Fly in nature's face:
—But how, if nature fly in my face first?
—Then nature's the aggressor. Dryden.

12. To FLY off. To revolt.

Deny to speak with me? They're sick, they're weary,
They have travell'd all the night! mean fetches;
The images of revolt, and flying off. Shakespeare.

The traitor Syphax
Flew off at once with his Numidian horse. Addison.

13. To FLY out. To burst into passion.

How easy is a noble spirit discern'd,
From harsh and sulphurous matter that flies out
In contumelies, makes a noise, and stinks. B. Johnson.
Passion is apt to ruffle, and pride will fly out into contumely and neglect. Collier.

14. To FLY out. To break out into licence.

You use me like a courser spur'd and rein'd:
If I fly out, my fierce words you command. Dryden.
Papists, when unopposed, fly out into all the pageantries of worship; but in times of war, when they are hard pressed by arguments, lie close intrenched behind the council of Trent. Dryden's Medal, Ded.

15. To FLY out. To start violently from any direction.

All bodies, moved circularly, have a perpetual endeavour to recede from the centre, and every moment would fly out in right lines, if they were not restrained. Bentley.

16. To let FLY. To discharge.

The noisy culverin, o'ercharg'd, let fly,
And bursts, unaiming, in the random sky. Granville.

17. To be light and unencumbered: as, a flying camp.

To FLY. v. a.

1. To shun; to avoid; to decline.

Love like a shadow flies, when substance love pursues;
Pursuing that which flies, and flying what pursues. Shak.
O Jove, I think
Foundations fly the wretched; such I mean,
Where they should be relieved. Shakespeare.

If you fly physick in health altogether, it will be too strange for your body when you shall need it. Bacon.

O whether shall I run, or which way fly
The fit of this fo' horrid spectacle? Milton.

2. To refuse associat on with.

Sleep flies the wretch; or when with cares oppress,
And his tot'd limbs are weary'd into rest,
Then dreams invade. Dryden.
Nature flies him like enchanted ground, Dryden.

3. To quit by flight.

Nº LVII.

Desalus, to fly the Cretan shore,
His heavy limbs on jointed pinions bore,
The first who fall'd in air. Dryden.

4. To attack by a bird of prey.

If a man can tame this monster, and with her fly other ravens fow, and kill them, it is somewhat worth. Bacon.
5. It is probable that flew was originally the preterite of fly, when it signified volation, and fled when it signified escape:
flew should be confined likewise to volation; but these distinctions are now confounded.

FLY. n. f. [Jeo-e, Saxon.]

1. A small winged insect of many species.

As flies to wanton boys, are we to th' gods;
They kill us for their sport. Shakespeare.
My country neighbours begin to think of being in general, before they come to think of the fly in their shoe, or the tares in their corn. Lack.
I prevent the fly, some propose to sow alms with the seed. Astucimer.

To heedless flies the window proves

A constant death. Thomson.
2. That part of a machine which, being put into a quick motion, regulates and equalises the motion of the rest.

If we suppose a man tied in the place of the weight, it were easy, by a single hair fastened unto the fly or balance of the jack, to draw him up from the ground. Wittius.

3. FLY, in a compas. That part which points how the wind blows.

To FLY 'BLow. v. a. [fly and blow.] To taint with flies; to fill with maggots.

I cannot discern any labyrinth, unless in the perplexity of his own thoughts; for I am unwilling to believe that he doth it with a design to play tricks, and to juggle my words, to make others mistake them. Stillingfleet.

Like a fly-town cake of tallow;
Or, on parchment, ink turn'd yellow. Swift.
So morning insects, that in music begun,
Shine, buzz, and fly in the setting sun. Pope.

FLY-BUAT. n. f. [fly and boat.] A kind of vessel nimble and light for sailing.

FLY-CATCHER. n. f. [fly and catch.] One that hunts flies.

There was more need of uratus in Domitian's days, to redeem or mend, than of Horace, to laugh at a flycatcher. D. J.
The swallow was a flycatcher as well as the spider. L'Estr.

FLYER. n. f. [from fly.]

1. One that flies or runs away.

They hit one another with darts, as the others do with their hands, which they never throw counter, but at the back of the fly. Sandys.

He grieves so many Britons should be lost;

Taking more pains, when he beheld them yield,
To save the fly than to win the field. Waller.

2. One that uses wings.

3. I he fly of a jack.

4. [In architecture.] Stairs made of an oblong square figure, whose fore and backides are parallel to each other, and so are their ends: the second of these flyers stands parallel behind the first, the third behind the second, and so are said to fly off from one another. Moxon.

To FLY-FISH. v. n. [fly and fish.] To angle with a hook baited with a fly.

I shall next give you some other directions for fly-fishing. Waller's Angler.

FOAL. n. f. [foal, Saxon.] The offspring of a mare, or other beast of burthen. The custom now is to use colt for a young horse, and foal for a young mare; but there was not originally any such distinction.

Also flew his steed,
And with his winged heels did tread the wind,
As he had been a foal of Pegasus's kind. F. Quene.

Twenty the asses and ten foals. Gen.

To FOAL. v. a. [from the noun.] To bring forth a foal.

Give my horse to Timon: it foals me straight Ten able hoises. Shakespeare.

Such colts as are
Of generous race, straight, when they first are foal'd, Walk proudly. Mey.

About September take your mares into the house, whete keep them 'till they foal. Mortimer.

FO'ALBIT. } n. f. Plants.

FO'ALFOOT. } n. f. [foam, Saxon.] The white substance which agitation or fermentation gathers on the top of liquors; froth; spume.

The foam upon the water.
Whitening, down their mossy tinctur'd stream
Defends the billowy foam. Thomson.

To FOAM. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To froth; to gather foam.

What a beard of the general's cut will do among foaming bottles and ale-wash'd wits, is wonderful. Shakespeare.
Cæsar fell down in the market-place, and foam'd at mouth,
and was speechless. Shakespeare.

To Pallas high the foaming bowl he crown'd,
And sprinkl'd large libations on the ground.
Upon a foaming horse
There follow'd straight a man of royal port.
2. To be in rage; to be violently agitated.
He foameth, and gnatheth with his teeth.
FOAMY, adj. [from foam.] Covered with foam; frothy.
More white than Neptune's foamy face,
When struggling rocks he would embrace.
Behold how high the foamy billows ride!
The winds and waves are on the juffer side.
FOB, n. f. [fuppe, fupackel, German.] A small pocket.
Who pick'd a job at holding forth,
And where a watch for half the worth
May be redeem'd.
When were the dice with more profusion thrown?
The well-fill'd job, not empty'd now alone.
He put his hand into his job, and presented me in his name with a tobacco-flopper.
There were two pockets which we could not enter; these he called his jobs: they were two large flits cut into the top of his middle cover, but squeezed close by the pressure of his belly.
Orphans around his bed the lawyer fees,
And takes the plaintiff's and defendant's fees;
His fellow pick-purse, watching for a job,
Fancies his fingers in the cully's job.
TO FOM, v. a. [fupfen, German.]
1. To cheat; to trick; to defraud.
I think it is scurvy, and begin to find myself fobb'd in it.
Shall there be a gallows standing in England when thou art king, and reclusion that fobb'd as it is with the rusty curb of old father antick the law.
He goes pressing forward, 'till he was fobb'd again with another story.
2. TO FOM OFF. To shift off; to put aside with an artifice; to delude by a trick.
You must not think
To foff off our disgraces with a tale.
For they, poor knaves, were glad to cheat,
To get their wives and chil'ren meat;
But these will not be fobb'd off so.
They must have wealth and power too.
By a Ravenna viutner once betray'd,
So much for wine and water mix'd I paid;
But when I thought the purchas'd liquor mine,
The rascal fobb'd me off with only wine.
Being a great lover of country-ports, I absolutely determined not to be a minister of state, nor to be fobb'd off with a garter.
FOCAL, adj. [from focus.] Belonging to the focus. See Focus
Schelhammer demandeth whether the convexity or con-cavity of the drum collects rays into a focal point, or scatters them.
FOCIL, n. f. [ficile, French.] The greater or less bone between the knee and ankle, or elb-w and wrist.
The fracture was of both the foails of the left leg.
FOCILLATION, n. f. [ficilia, Lat.] Comfort; support.
FOCUS, n. f. [Latin.]
1. [In optics.] The focus of a glass is the point of convergence or concourse, where the rays meet and cross the axis after their refraction by the glass.
The point from which rays diverge, or to which they converge, may be called their focus.
2. FOCUS of a Parabola. A point in the axis within the figure, and distant from the vertex by a fourth part of the parameter,
or latus rectum.
3. FOCUS of an Ellipsis. A point toward's each end of the longer axis; from whence two right lines being drawn to any point in the circumference, shall be together equal to that longer axis.
4. FOCUS of the Hyperbola. A point in the principal axis, within the opposite hyperbola's; from which if any two right lines are drawn, meeting in either of the opposite hyperbolas, the difference will be equal to the principal axis.
FOEDER, n. f. [foëre, foëre, Saxon.] Dry food stored up for cattle against winter.
Their cattle, starving for want of fodder, corrupted the air.
Being not to be raised without wintering, they will help to force men into improvement of land by a necessity of fodder.
Of grafs and fodder thou defraud'st the dams,
And of their mothers dugs the starving lambs.
TO FODDER, v. a. [from the noun.] To feed with dry food.
Natural earth is taken the first half spit from just under the surf of the best pasture ground, in a place that has been well foddered on.
From winter keep,
Well fodder'd in the stalls, thy tender sheep.

Approve the best, and follow what I approve. Milton.
Strange, that your fingers should the pencil fail,
Without the help of colours or of oil! Waller.
He had been foiled in the cure, and had left it to nature. Wifeman's Surgery.
In their conflicts with sin they have been so often foiled, that they now despair of ever getting the day. Calamy's Sermons.
Virtue, disdain, despair, I oft have try'd;
And, foil'd, have with new arms my foe defy'd.
But I, the comfort of the thunderer,
Have wag'd a long and unsuccessful war;
With various arts and arms in vain have toil'd,
And by a mortal man at length am foil'd. Dryden.

FOLL. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A defeat; a miscarriage; an advantage gain'd without a complete conquest.
We of thy cunning had no diffidence;
One ludden foil shall never breed distrust. Shakespeare.
Whosoever overthrow his mate in such sort, as that either his back, or the one shoulder, and contrary heel do touch the ground, shall be accounted to give the fall: if he be endangered and make a narrow escape, it is called a foil. Carew.
So after many a foil, the temper proud,
Renewing fresh assaults, amidst his pride,
Fell whence he flood to see his victor fall.
When age shall level me to impotence,
And sweating pleasure leave me on the foil,
Death never won a stake with greater toil,
Nor e'er was fate so near a foil. Dryden.

2. [Fenille, French.] Leaf; gilding.
A stately palace, built of squared brick,
Which cunningly was without mortar laid,
Whose walls were high, but nothing strong nor thick,
And golden foil all over them display'd. Spenser.
Fame is no plant that grows on mortal soil,
Nor in the glittering foil
Set off to th' world, nor in broad rumour lies. Milton.

3. Something of another colour near which jewels are set to raise their lustre.
As the a black silk cap on him begun
To set for foil of his milk-white to serve.
Like bright metal on a fullen ground,
My reformation glittering o'er my fault;
Shall shew more goodly, and attract more eyes,
Than that which hath no foil to set it off. Shakespeare.
The fullen passage of thy weary steps
Esteem a foil, wherein thou art to set
The precious jewel of thy home. Shakespeare.
'Tis the property of all true diamonds to unite the foil closely itself, and thereby better augment its lustre: the foil is a mixture of mallick and burnt ivory. Grav's Museum.
Hector has a foil to set him off: we are perpetually opposing the incontinence of Paris to the temperance of Hector Notes on the Odyssey.

4. [From failler, French.] A blunt sword used in fencing.
He that plays the king shall be welcome; his majesty shall have tribute of me: the adventurous knight shall use his foil and target. Shakespeare. Hamlet.

And every way did seek into his life;
Ne plate, ne mail, could ward lo mighty throws,
But yielded passage to his cruel knife.
He cares not what mischief he doth, if his weapon be out:
he will foin like any devil; he will spare neither man, woman, nor child. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

Then both, no moment lost, at once advance
Against each other, arm'd with sword and lance:
They lath, they foin, they pass, they strive to bore
Their comrades, and the thinnest parts explore. Dryden.

FOINING. n. f. [from the verb.] A thrust; a push.
FOININGLY. adv. [from foin.] In a pushing manner.

carriages that follow on it must be imputed to his own election. Locke.

To tempt them to do what is neither for their own nor the good of those under their care, great mischief cannot be done. Locke.

4. To be consequential, as inference to premises.

Though there are, or have been sometimes dwarfs, and sometimes giants in the world; yet it does not follow that there must be such in every age, nor in every country. Yong.

This dangerous doctrine must necessarily follow from making all political power to be nothing else but Adam's personal power. Locke.

5. To continue endeavours.

Then shall we know, if we follow on to know the Lord. Isa.

FO'LLLOWER. n. f. [from follow.]

1. One who comes after another; not before him, or side by side.

Little gallant, you were wont to be a follower; but now you are a leader: whether had you rather lead mine eyes, or eye your master's heels? Shakspeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.

No flop, no stay, but clouds of land arise,
Spurn'd and cast backward on the followers' eyes. Dryden.

2. A dependant.

No followers, but a friend. Pope.

4. An associate; a companion.

How accompanied, canst thou tell that?
—With Poins, and other his continual followers. Shakspeare.

5. One under the command of another.

I hold it no wisdom to leave unto them too much command over their kindred, but rather withdraw their followers from them as much as may be, and gather them under the command of law. Spenser's State of Ireland.

The understanding, that should be eyes to the blind faculty of the will, is blind itself, and to brings all the inconsequential that attend a blind follower, under the conduct of a blind guide. Swift's Sermons.

And forc'd Æneas, when his ships were lost,
To leave his followers on a foreign coast. Dryden.

6. A scholar; an imitator; a copy; one of the same sort.

Be ye followers of me, even as I am of Christ. 1 Cor. xi.

Every one's idea of identity will not be the same that Pythagoras and thousands of his followers have.

The studious head or generous mind,
Follower of God, or friend of human kind,
Poet or patriot, robe but to refuse
The faith and morals nature gave before. Pope's Essay on Criticism.

FOLLY. n. f. [folie, French.]

1. Want of understanding; weakness of intellect.
2. Criminal weakness; depravity of mind.

Think't thou, that duty shall have dread to speak,
When pow'r to flattery bows? To plainness honour
Is bound, when majesty to folly falls. Shakespeare.

3. Act of negligence or passion unbecoming gravity or deep wisdom. In this sense it is a plural.

Love is blind, and lovers cannot see
The pretty follies that themselves commit;
For if they could, Cupid himself would bluish
To see me thus transformed to a boy. Shakespeare.

Leave such to trifle with more grace and ease,
Whom folly pleases, or whose follies please. Pope.

- To FOMENT. v. a. [fomentor, Latin; fomenter, French.]

patents do their children. Watson.

Blame then thyself, as reason's law requires,
Since nature gave, and thou foment'st my fires. Dryden.

They are troubled with those ill humours, which they themselves infused and fomented in them. Lack.

FOMENTATION. n. f. [fomentation, Fr. from foment.]

1. A fomentation is partial bathing, called also stuping, which is applying hot fannels to any part, dipped in medicated decoctions, whereby the steams breathe into the parts, and discuss obstructed humours. Quincy.

Fomentation callets forth the humour by vapours; but yet, in regard of the way made by the poultis, draweth gently the humour out: for it is a gentle fomentation, and hath withal a mixture of some stupefactive. Bacon.

2. The lotion prepared to foment the parts.

The medicines were prepared by the physicians, and the lotion or fomentations by the nurses. Ariburnst.

FOMENTER. n. f. [from foment.] An encourager; a supporter

These fatal distempers, as they did much hurt to the body politic at home, being like humours stirred in the natural without evacuation, so did they produce disadvantageous effects abroad; and better had it been, that the raisers and fomenters of them had never sprung up in Druiua. Huvel.

FON. n. f. [Scott. A word now obsolete.] A fool; an idiot.

Sicker I hold him for a greater fon,
That loves the thing he cannot purchase. Spenser.

FOND. adv. [fenn, Scottish. A word of which I have found no satisfactory etymology. To fenne is in Chaucer to doat, to be foolish.]

1. Foolish; silly; indiscreet; imprudent; injudicious.

This we know that the Grecians or Gentiles did account foolishness; but that they ever did think it a fond or unlikely way to seek men's conversion by sermons, we have not heard. Hosker.

He was beaten out of all love of learning by a fond schoolmaster. Ajcham.

Tell these sad women,
'Tis fond to laugh at them. Shakespeare.

Grant I may never prove so fond
To trust man on his oath or bond. Shakespeare.

I am weaker than a woman's tear,
Tamer than sleep, fonder than ignorance. Shakespeare.

Fond thoughts may fall into some idle brain;
But one belief of all, is ever wise. Davies.

Thou see'st
How subtly to detain thee I devise,
Inviting thee to hear while I relate;
Fond! were it not in hope of thy teply. Milton.

So fond are mortal men,
Fall'n into wrath divine,
As their own ruin on themselves t' invite. Milton.

'Twas not revenge for griev'd Apollo's wrong
Those æt's ears on Midas' temples hung;
But fond tepentance of his happy with. Waller.

But reason with your fond religion fights;
For many gods are many infinities. Dryden.

This is fond, because it is the way to cheat thyself.
Tillotson.

talk of things with freedom and boldness before they thoroughly understand them. Harris.

To FOND. } v. a. [from the noun.] To treat with great
To FONDLE } indulgence; to caress; to coddle.

Howe't unjust your jealousy appear,
It does my pity, not my anger move:
I'll fond it to the forward child of love. Dryden.

When amidst the fervour of the feast,
The Tyrian hugs, and fonds thee on her breast,
And with sweet kisses in her arms con strains,
Thou may'st infuse thy venom in her veins. Dryden.

They are allowed to kiss the child at meeting and parting;
but a professor, who always stands by, will not suffer them to use any fondling expressions. Gulliver.

To FOND. v. n. To be fond of; to be in love; to doat on.

How will this sadge? My master loves her dearly;
And I, poor monster, fond as much on him;
And the, mistaken, seems to doat on me. Shakespeare.

FONDLE. n. f. [from fond.] One who fondles.

FONDLING. n. f. [from fondle.] A person or thing much fondled or caressed; something regarded with great affection.

Partiality in a parent is commonly unlucky; for fondlings are in danger to be made fools, and the children that are least coddled make the best and wisest men. L'Estrange.

The bent of our own minds may favour any opinion or action, that may shew it to be a fondling of our own. Lack.

Any body would have guessed miss to have been bred up under a cruel stepdame, and John to be the fondling of a tender mother. Ariburnst.

Bred a fondling and an heirless,
Dress'd like any lady may'rels;
Cock'd by the servants round,
Was too good to touch the ground. Swift.

FONDLY. adv. [from fond.]

vein be opened in the arm of some wholesome young man, and the blood to be sucked. Bacon.

The military mound
The British files transfix, in evil hour
For their proud foes, that fondly bray'd their fate. Philips.

Some valuing those of their own side or mind,
Still make themselves the measure of mankind;
Fondly we think we merit honour then,
When we but praise ourselves in other men. Pope.

Under those sacred leaves, secure
From common lightning of the skies,
He fondly thought he might endure
The flashes of Ardelia's eyes. Swift.

2. With great or extreme tenderness.

Ev'n before the fatal engine clos'd,
A wretched sylph too fondly interpos'd;

FOOD. n. f. [fræan, Sax. voeden, Dut. to feed; feed, Scott.] 1. Victuals; provision for the mouth.

On my knees I beg,
That you'll vouchsafe me raiment, bed, and food. Shakespeare.
Much food is in the tillage of the poor. Prov. xiii. 23.

Under whose lowly roof thou hast vouchsaf'd
To enter, and these earthly fruits to taste;
Food not of angels, yet accepted so,
As that more willingly thou could'st not seem
At heav'n's high feasts t' have fed. Milton.

They give us food, which may with nectar vie,
And wax that does the abient funn supply. Waller.

2. Any thing that nourishes
Give me some musick: musick, moody food
Of us that trade in love. Shakespeare.

O dear son Edgar,
The food of thy abused father's wrath,
Might I but live to see thee in my touch,
I'd lay, I had eyes again. Shakespeare.

FOODFUL. adj. [food and full.] Fruitful; full of food; plentifulous.

There Titus was to see, who took his birth
From heav'n, his nursing from the foodful earth. Dryden.
FOODY. adj. [from food.] Eatable; fit for food.

To vessels, wine the drew;
And into well few'd sacks pour'd foody meal. Chapman.

FOOL. n. f. [fool, Welsh; fol, Islandick; fol, French.] 1. One to whom nature has denied reason; a natural; an idiot.

Do'st thou call me fool, boy?
—All thy other titles thou hast given away that thou wast born with. Shakespeare.

The fool multitude, that chuse by show,
Not learning more than the fond eye doth teach,
Which pry not to th' interior. Shakespeare.

It may be asked, whether the eldest son, being a fool, shall inherit paternal power before the younger, a wise man. Locke.
He thanks his stars he was not born a fool. Pope.

The fool hath said in his heart there is no God. Pf. xiv. 1.

3. A term of indignity and reproach.
To be thought knowing, you must first put the fool upon all mankind. Dryden.

4. One who counterfeits folly; a buffoon; a jester.
Where's my knave, my fool? Go you, and call my fool hither. Shakespeare.

I scorn, although their drudge, to be their fool or jester. Milt.
If this disguise fit not naturally on to grave a person, yet it may become him better than that fool's coat. Denham.

5. To play the fool. To play pranks like a hired jester; to jest; to make sport.

I returning where I left his armour, found another instead thereof, and armed myself therein to play the fool. Sidney.

6. To play the fool. To act like one void of common understanding.

Well, thus we play the fools with the time,
And the spirits of the wife sit in the clouds Shakespeare.

And mock us.
Is it worth the name of freedom to be at liberty to pay the fool, and draw shame and misery upon a man's self? Locke.

7. To make a fool. To disappoint; to defeat
"Twere as good a deed as to drink when a man's a-hungry, to challenge him to the field, and then to break promise with him, and make a fool of him. Shakespeare.

TO FOOL. v. n. [from the noun.] To trifle; to toy; to play; to idle; to sport.

I, in this kind of merry fooling, am nothing to you; so you may continue and laugh at nothing still. Shakespeare.

Fool not; for all may have,
If they dare try, a glorious life, a grave. Herbert.

If you have the luck to be court-fools, those that have either wit or honesty, you may fool withal, and spare not. Denham.

It must be an industrious youth that provides against age; and he that fools away the one, must either beg or starve in the other. L'Estrange.

He must be happy that knows the true measures of fooling. L'Estrange.

Is this a time for fooling? Dryden.

TO FOOL. v. a.

1. To treat with contempt; to disappoint; to frustrate; to defeat.

And shall it in more shame be further spoken.
That you are fool'd, discarded, and shook off? Shakespeare.

If it be you that stir their daughters hearts
Against their father, fool me not so much
To bear it tamely. Shakespeare.

When I am read, thou feign'st a weak applause,
As if thou wert my friend, but lack'st a cause:
This but thy judgment fools; the other way
Would both thy folly and thy spite betray. Ben. Jonson.

Him over-weaning
To over-reach; but with the serpent meeting,
Fool'd and beguild. Milton.

If men loved to be deceived and fool'd about their spiritual estate, they cannot take a surer course than by taking their neighbour's word for that, which can be known only from their own heart.

When I consider life, 'tis all a cheat;
For fool'd with hope, men favour the deceit.
I'm tir'd with waiting for this chemick gold,
Which fools us young, and beggars us when old. Dryden.

I would advise this blinded set of men not to give credit to those, by whom they have been so often fooled and imposed upon. Addis.

2. To infatuate.

It were an handsome plot,
But full of difficulties, and uncertain;
And he's so fool'd with downright honesty,
He'll ne'er believe it. Denham.

A long and eternal adieu to all unlawful pleasures: I will no longer be fooled or imposed upon by them. Celency.

A boor of Holland, whose cares of growing still richer and richer, perhaps fool him so far as to make him enjoy less in his riches than others in poverty. Tempe.

3. To cheat: as, to fool one of his money.

FOOLBORN. adj. [fool and born.] Foolish from the birth.
Reply not to me with a foolborn jest. Shakespeare.

FOOLERY. n. f. [from fool.]

1. Habitual folly.

Foolery, sir, does walk about the orb like the sun; it shines every where: I would be sorry, sir, but the fool should be as oft with your master as with my mistress. Shakespeare.

2. An act of folly; trifling practice.

It is mere foolery to multiply distinct particulars in treating of things, where the difference lies only in words. Warr.

3. Object of folly.

That Pythagoras, Plato, or Orpheus believed in any of these fooleries, it cannot be suspected. Relick.

We are transported with fooleries, which, if we understand, we should despise. L'Estrange.

FOOLHAPPY. adj. [fool and happy.] Lucky without contrivance or judgment.

As when a ship, that flies fair under sail,
An hidden rock escaped unawares,
That lay in wait her wreck for to bewail;
The mariner, yet half amazed, stares
At perils past, and yet in doubt ne dares
To joy at his foolhappy oversight. Spenser.

FOOLHARDINESS. n. f. [from foolhardy.] Mad rashness; courage without sense.

A false glozing parasite would call his foolhardiness valour, and then he may go on boldly, because blindly. South.

There is a difference betwixt daring and foolhardiness: Lucan and Statius often ventured them too far, our Virgil never. Dryden.

FOOLHARDISE. n. f. [fool and hardie's, French.] Foolhardiness; adventurousness without judgment. Obsolete.

More huge in strength than wife in works he was,
And reason with foolhardise over-ran;
Stern melancholy did his courage pass,
And was, for terror more, all arm'd in shining brass. Spenser.

FOOLHARDY. adj. [fool and hardy.] Daring without judgments; madly adventurous; foolishly bold.

One mother, when as her foolhardy child
Did come too near, and with his talons play,
Half dead through fear, her little babe revild.
Some would be so foolhardy as to presume to be more of the cabinet-council of God Almighty than the angels. Hind.

If any yet be so foolhardy,
To expose themselves to vain jeopardy;
If they come wounded off, and lame,
No honour's got by such a main. Hudibras.

FOOLTRAP. n. f. [fool and trap.] A snare to catch fools in: as a flytrap.

Bets, at the first, were fooltraps, where the wife
Like spiders lay in ambush for the flies. Dryden.

FOOLISH. adj. [from fool.]

1. Void of understanding; weak of intellect.

6 Like

Like Romans; neither feishly in our stands,
Nor cowardly in retire.

Shakespeare.

3. Ridiculous; contemptible.

It is a feishly thing to make a long prologue, and to be short in the story itself.

2 Mac. ii. 32.

Pray do not mock me;

I am a very feishly fond old man;

I fear I am not in my perfect mind.

Shakespeare.

What could the head perform alone,

If all their friendly aids were gone?

A feishly figure he must make;

Do nothing else but sleep and ake.

Prior.

4. [In Scripture.] Wicked; sinful.

FOOLISHLY. adv. [from feishly.] Weakly; without understanding. In Scripture, wickedly.

Although we boast our Winter fun looks bright,

And feishly are glad to see it as its height;

Yet so much sooner comes the long and gloomy night. Swift.

FOOLISHNESS. n. f. [from feishly.]

1. Folly; want of understanding.

2. Foolish practice; actual deviation from the right.

Feishness being properly a man's deviation from right reason, in point of practice, must needs consist in his pitching upon such an end as is unsuitable to his condition, or pitching upon means unsuitable to the compassing of his end.

South.

Charm'd by their eyes, their manners I acquire,

And shape my feishness to their desire.

Prior.

FOOLSTONES. n. f. A plant.

The characters are: it hath an anomalous flower, consisting of six dissimilar leaves; the five uppermost of which are so disposed as to imitate in some manner a helmet.

Miller.

FOOT. n. f. plural feet. [poet, Saxon; voet, Dutch; fat, Scottish.]

1. The part upon which we stand.

The queen that bore thee,

Off'n'er upon her knees than on her feet,

Died ev'ry day the liv'd.

Shakespeare.

His affection to the church was so notorious, that he never deserted it 'till both it and he were over-run and trod under feet.

Clarendon.

2. That by which any thing is supported in the nature of a foot.

3. The lower part; the base.

Yond' towers, whose wanton tops do buse the clouds,

Must kiss their own feet.

Shakespeare.

Fretting, by little and little, washes away and eats out both the tops and fides and feet of mountains.

Hakewill.

4. The end; the lower part.

What dismal cries are those?

—Nothing; a trifling fun of misery,

New added to the feet of thy account;

Thy wife is seiz'd by force and born away.

Dryden.

5. The act of walking.

Antiochus departed, weening in his pride to make the land navigable, and the sea passible by feet.

2 Mac. v. 21.

6. On FOOT. Walking; without carriage.

Israel journeyed about six hundred thousand on foot.

Ex. xii.

The centurions and their charges distinctly billeted, already in the entertainment, and to be on foot at an hour's warning.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

8. Infantry; footmen in arms.

In this sense it has no plural.

Lulus gathered threecore thousand choice men of foot, and five thousand horsemen.

1 Mac. iv. 28.

Himself with all his feet entered the town, his horse being quartered about it.

Clarendon.

Thrice horse and foot about the fires are led,

And thrice with loud laments they wail the dead.

Dryden.

9. State; character; condition.

See on what foot we stand; a scanty store,

The fate behind, our enemies before.

Dryden.

In specifying the word Ireland, it would seem to insinuate that we are not upon the same foot with our fellow subjects in England.

Swift.

What colour of excuse can be for the contempt with which we treat this part of our species, that we should not put them upon the common foot of humanity, that we should only set an insignificant fine upon the man who murders them?

Addis.

10. Scheme; plan; settlement.

There is no wellwisher to his country without a little hope, that in time the kingdom may be on a better foot.

Swift.

I ask, whether upon the foot of our constitution, as it stood in the reign of the late king James, a king of England may be deposted?

Swift.

11. A state of incipient existence.

If such a tradition were at any time set on foot, it is not easy to imagine how it should at first gain entertainment; but much more difficult how it should come to be universally propagated.

Tillotson.

12. It seems to have been once proverbially used for the level, the square, par.

Were it not for this easy borrowing upon interest, mens necessities would draw upon them a most sudden undoing, in that they would be forced to sell their means, be it lands or goods, far under foot.

Lucien.

13. A certain number of syllables constituting a distinct part of a verse.

Feet, in our English versifying, without quantity and joints, be fore signs that the verse is either born deformed, unnatural, or lame.

Afham.

Did'st thou hear these verses?

—O yes, I heard them all, and more too; for some of them had in them more feet than the verses would bear.

Shakespeare.

14. Motion; action.

While other jests are something rank on foot,

Her father hath commanded her to slip

Away with Slender to marry.

Shakespeare.

In the government of the world the number and variety of the ends on foot, with the secret nature of most things to which they relate, must make a distinct remark of their congruity, in some cases very difficult, and in some unattainable.

Grew.

15. A measure containing twelve inches.

When it signifies measure it has often, but viciously, foot in the plural.

An orange, lemon, and apple, wrapt in a linnen cloth, being buried for a fortnight's space four feet deep within the earth, came forth no ways mouldy or rotten.

Bacon.

16. Step.

This man's son would, every foot and anon, be taking some of his companions into the orchard.

L'Estrange.

FOOT. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To dance; to tread wantonly; to trip.

Lonely the vale and full of horror wood,

Brown with the shade of a religious wood;

The moon was up, and shot a gleamy light;

He saw a quire of ladies in a round,

That feately footed seem'd to skim the ground.

Dryden.

2. To walk not side; not fly.

By this the dreadful beast drew nigh to land,

Half flying, and half footing in his haste.

Take heed, have open eye; for thieves do foot by night. Sb.

The man set the boy upon the ass, and footed it himself.

L'Estrange.

With them a man sometimes cannot be a penitent, unless he also turns vagabond, and foots it to Jerusalem; or wanders over this or that part of the world, to visit the shrine of such or such a pretended saint.

South.

If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try, for once, who can foot it farthest.

Dryden.

FOOT. v. a.

1. To spurn; to kick.

You, that did your rheum upon my beard, and foot me as you spurn a stranger cur over your threshold.

Shakespeare.

2. To settle; to fall to fix.

What condesc'ndacy have you with the traitors

Late footed in the kingdom?

Shakespeare.

3. To tread.

Saint Withold footed thrice the wold;

He met the night-mare, and her name told;

Bid her alight, and her troth plight,

And aroynt thee, witch, aroynt thee right.

Shakespeare.

There haply by the ruddy damsel seen,

Or shepherd boy, they feately foot the green.

Tickell.

FOOTBALL. n. f. [foot and ball.] A ball commonly made of a blown bladder cased with leather, driven by the foot.

Am I so round with you as you with me,

That like a football you do spurn me thus?

Shakespeare.

Such a Winter-piece should be beautiful with all manner of works and exercises of Winter; as football, felling of wood, and sliding upon the ice.

Feucham.

As when a host of lusty shepherds try

Their force at football, care of victory

Makes them salute so rudely, breast to breast,

That their encounter seems too rude for jest.

Waller.

One rolls along a foot, all to his loss,

One with a broken truncheon deals his blows.

Dryden.

He was sensible the common football was a very imperfect imitation of that exercise.

Archibut.

FOOTBOY. n. f. [foot and boy.] A low menial; an attendant in livery.

Was it discretion, lords, to let this man,

This honest man, wait like a lowly footboy

At chamber-door?

Shakespeare.

Though I had no body to assist but a footboy, yet I made shift to try a pretty number of things.

Boyle.

Whenever he imagines advantage will redound to one of his footboys by oppression of me, he never disputes it.

Swift.

FOOTBRIDGE. n. f. [foot and bridge.] A bridge on which passengers walk; a narrow bridge.

Palemon's shepherd, fearing the footbridge was not strong enough, loaded it so long, 'till he broke that which would have born a bigger burden.

Saling.

FOOTCLOATH. n. f. [foot and clouth] A fumpter cloath.

Thrice

Three times to-day my footloath horse did stumble,
And started when he look'd upon the Tower,
As loth to bear me to the slaughterhouse. Shakespeare.
FETTERD. adj. [from foot.] Shaped in the foot.
Snouted and tailed like a boar, and foeted like a goat. Grew.
FOOTFIGHT. n. f. [foot and fight.] A fight made on foot, in opposition to that on horseback.
So began our footfight in such sort, that we were well entered to blood of both sides. Sidney.
FOOTHOLD. n. f. [foot and hold.] Space to hold the foot;
space on which one may tread surely.
So they all fell to work at the roots of the tree, and left it to little foetbold, that the first blast of wind laid it flat upon the ground. L'Estrange.
He's never well 'till he's at the top: he has nothing above him to aspire to nor any foetbold left him to come down by.
L'Estrange.

FOOTING. n. f. [from foot.]

- Ground for the foot.
I'll read you matter deep and dangerous;
As full of peril and adventurous spirit
As to o'erwalk a current, roaring loud,
On the unlicked salt footing of a spear. Shakespeare.
As Noah's pigeon, which return'd no more,
Did shew the footing found, for all the flood. Davies.
In ascents, every step gained is a footing and help to the Holder. Holder.

NEAT.

- Foundation; basis; support; root.
Cloven flakes; and, wond'rous to behold,
Their sharpen'd ends in earth their footing place,
And the dry poles produce a living race. Dryden.
All those sublime thoughts take their rise and footing here:
the minds flir not one jot beyond those ideas which sense or reflection have offered. Locke.
The reasoning faculties of the soul would not know how to move, for want of a foundation and footing in most men, who cannot trace truth to its fountain and original. Locke.

- Place.
Whether their unquiet exhalations are,
Fir'd by the sun, or seeming to alone;
Or each some more remote and slippery star,
Which loses footing when to mortals shewn. Dryden.

- Tread; walk.
I would outnight you did no body come:
But hark, I hear the footing of a man. Shakespeare.
Break off, break off; I feel the different found
Of some chafte footing near about this ground:
Run to your throuds, within these brakes and trees;
Our number may affright. Milton.

- Dance.
Make holiday: your rye straw hats put on,
And these fresh nymphs encounter every one
In country footing. Shakespeare.

- Steps; road; track.
He grew strong among the Irish; and in his footing his son continuing, hath increased his said name. Spenser.
Like running weeds, that have no certain root; or like footing up and down, impossible to be traced. Bacon.

- Entrance; beginning; establishment.
Ever since our nation had any footing in this land, the state of England did desire to perfect the conquest. Davies.
The defeat of colonel Bellasis gave them their first footing
in Yorkshire. Clarendon.

- No useful arts have yet found footing here;
But all untaught and savage does appear. Dryden.

- State; condition; settlement.
Gaul was on the same footing with Egypt, as to taxes. Arb.
FOOTLICKER. n. f. [foot and lick.] A slave; an humble fawner; one who licks the foot.

- Do that good mischief which may make this island
Thine own for ever; and I, thy Caliban,
For ay thy foetlicker. Shakespeare.

FOOTMAN. n. f. [foot and man.]

- A soldier that marches and fights on foot.
The numbers levied by her lieutenant did consist of footmen three millions, of horsemen one million. Raleigh.

- A low menial servant in livery.
He was carried in a rich chariot, litterwise, with two horses at either end, and two footmen on each side. Bacon.
Like footmen running before coaches.

- To tell the inn what loud approaches. Prior.

- One who practises to walk or run.

FOOTMANSHIP. n. f. [from footman.] The art or faculty of a runner.
The Irish archers espying this, suddenly broke up, and committed the safety of their lives to their nimble footman- ship. Hayward.

Yet says the fox, I have baffled more of them with my wiles and shifts than ever you did with your footmanship. L'Estr.

FOOTPACE. n. f. [foot and pace.]

- Part of a pair of stairs, whereon, after four or five steps, you arrive to a broad place, where you make two or three paces before you ascend another step, thereby to ease the legs in ascending the rest of the stairs. Milner.

- A pace no faster than a slow walk.

FOOTPAD. n. f. [foot and pad.] A highwayman that robs on foot, not on horseback.

FOOTPATH. n. f. [foot and path.] A narrow way which will not admit horses or carriages.

Know't thou the way to Dover?
—Both stile and gate, horseway and footpath. Shakespeare.

FOOTPOST. n. f. [foot and post.] A post or messenger that travels on foot.

For carrying such letters, every thoroughfare weekly ap-pointeth a footpost, whose dispatch is well near as speedy as the horses. Carew.

FOOTSTALL. n. f. [foot and stall.] A woman's stall.

FOOTSTEP. n. f. [foot and step.]

- Trace; track; impression left by the foot.
Clear-sighted reason wisdom's judgment leads,
And sense, her vassal, in her footsteps treads. Dennis.
A man shall never want crooked paths to walk in, if he thinks that he is in the right way, where ever he has the foot- steps of others to follow. Laing.

- Taken; mark; notice given.
Let us turn our thoughts to the frame of our fathers, if there we may trace any visible footsteps of Divine Wisdom and Benediction. Bacon.

3. Example.
FOOTSTOOL. n. f. [foot and stool.] Stool on which he sits places his feet.

Thus have we swept suspicion from our feet,
And made our footstool of security. Shakespeare.

They whose sacred office 'tis to bring
Kings to obey their God, and men their king,
By these mysterious links to fix and tie
Men to the footstool of the Deity. Dennis.

Let echoing anthems make his praises known
On earth, his footstool, as in heav'n his throne. Raymond.
By the praise of worshipping his footstool, no more a secret than worshipping God at his footstool. Sallustian.

FOP. n. f. [A word probably made by chance, and therefore without etymology.] A simper; a coxcomb; a man of small understanding and much ostentation; a puerile; a man fond of show, dress, and flutter; an impertinent.

A whole tribe of fops,
Got 'tween asleep and wake. Shakespeare.

When such a positive abandon'd fop,
Among his numerous absurdities,
Stumbles upon some tolerable line,
I fret to see them in such company. Ridgway.

The leopard's beauty, without the fox's wit, is no better than a fop in a gay coat. L'Estrange.

In a dull stream, which moving slow,
You hardly fee the current flow;
When a small breeze obstructs the course,
It whirls about for want of force,
And in its narrow circle gathers
Nothing but chaff, and straws, and feathers:

The current of a female mind
Stops thus, and turns with ev'ry wind;
Thus whirling round, together draws
Fools, fops, and rakes, for chaff and straws. Swift.

FOPDIDDLE. n. f. [fop and diddle.] A fool; an insignificant wretch.

Where sturdy butchers broke your noddie,
And handled you like a fopdiddle. Hallam.

FOPPERY. n. f. [from fop.]

- Folly; impertinence.
Let not the sound of shallow foppery enter
My sober house. Shakespeare.

I was three or four times in the thought they were not wa-ries; and yet the guinefins of my mind, the sudden suspect of my powers, drove the grolleins of the foppery into a received belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhyme and reason. Shakespeare.

That they were fairies.
This is the excellent foppery of the world, that when we are sick in fortune, often the surfeits of our own behaviour, we make guilty of our disasters the sun, the moon and stars,
as if we were villains on necessity. Shakespeare.

- Affliction of show or importance; showy folly.

- Foolery; vain or idle practice; idle affliction.
They thought the people were better let alone in their fo-
pries, than to be suffered to break loose from that tedious which your superstition kept them in. Shakespeare.

But though we fetch from Italy and France
Our fopperies of tones, and mode of dance,
Our sturdy Britons scorn to borrow sense.

I with I could say quaint fopperies were wholly about town graver subjects. Gravelle.

- Foolish; idle; vain.

Fools ne'er had less grace in a year;

For wife men are grown foppish,

And know not how their wits to wear,

Their manners are so apish.

Shakspeare.

2. Vain in show; foolishly ostentatious; vain of dress.

The vain are sprightly and the stupid grave;

The slothful negligent, the foppish neat;

The lewd are airy, and the fly discreet.

Garth.

The Romans grew extremely expensive and foppish in this article; so that the emperor Aurelian forbid men that variety of colours on their shoes, allowing it still to women. Arbuth.

FOPPISHLY adv. [from foppish.] Vainly, ostentatiously.

FOPPISHNESS n. f. [from foppish.] Vanity; showy or ostentatious vanity.

FOPPLING n. f. [from fop.] A petty fop; an under-rate cockcomb.

And, with his tailor, share the foppish heart.

T. Kell.

FOR prep. [from, Saxon; for, Dutch.]

1. Because of.

That which we for our unworthiness are afraid to crave, our prayer is, that God for the worthiness of his son would notwithstanding vouchsafe to grant.

Hooker.

Edward and Richard,

With fiery eyes sparkling for very wrath,

Are at our backs.

Shakspeare.

Speak, good Cominius;

Leave nothing out for length.

Shakspeare.

For as much as the question cannot be scanned, unless the time of Abraham's journey be considered of, I will search into a tradition concerning his travels.

Raleigh.

An astrologer saith, it it were not for two things that are constant, no individual would last one moment.

Bacon.

For as much as it is a fundamental law in the Turkish empire, that they may, without any other provocation, make war upon Christendom for the propagation of their laws; so the Christians may at all times, as they think good, be upon the prevention.

Bacon.

The governor, falling out, took great store of victual and warlike provision, which the Turks had for halfe left behind them.

Knutler.

Their offer he willingly accepted, knowing that he was not able to keep that place three days, for lack of victual. Knutler.

Quit, quit, for shame; this will not move,

This cannot take her:

If of herself she will not love,

Nothing can make her.

Care not for frowns or smiles.

Sackling.

Denham.

The hypocrite or carnal man hopes, and is the wicked for hoping.

Hammond.

Let no man, for his own poverty, become more oppressing in his bargains; but quietly recommend his estate to God, and leave the success to him.

Taylor.

Persons who have lost most of their grinders, having been compelled to use three or four only in chewing, wore them so low that the inward nerve lay bare, and they would no longer for pain make use of them.

Ray.

I but revenge my fate; disclaim'd, betray'd,

And suffering death for this ungrateful maid.

Dryden.

Sole on the barren sands, the suffering chief

Roar'd out for anguish, and indulg'd his grief.

Dryden.

For his long absence church and state did groan,

Madness the pulpit, faction seiz'd the throne.

Dryden.

Nor with a superstitious fear is aw'd

For what befalls at home, or what abroad.

Dryden.

I, my own judge, condemn'd myself before;

For pity, aggravate my crime no more.

Dryden.

Matrons of renown,

When tyrant Nero burnt th' imperial town,

Shriek'd for the downfall in a doleful cry,

For which their guiltless lords were doom'd to die.

Dryden.

Children, discountenanced by their parents for any fault,

find a refuge in the caresses of foolish flatterers.

Locke.

A found mind in a found body is a short but full description of a happy fate in this world: he that has these two has little more to wish for, and he that wants either of them will be but little the better for any thing else.

Locke.

The middle of the gulph is remarkable for tempests.

Addison.

My open'd thought to joyous prospect raise,

And for thy merry let me sing thy praise.

Than we to stretch it out.

Shakspeare.

A paltry ring

That did give me, whose poetry was,

For all the world, like cutters poetry

Upon a knife; Love me and leave me not.

Shakspeare.

For all the world,

As thou art at this hour, was Richard then.

Shakspeare.

It was young counsel for the persons, and violent counsel for the matters.

Bacon.

Authority followeth old men, and favour and popularity youth; but for the moral part, perhaps youth will have the pre-eminence, as age hath for the politic.

Bacon.

Comets are rather gazed upon than wisely observed in their effects; that is, what kind of comet for magnitude or colour,

Bacon.

produceth what kind of effects.

For me, if there be such a thing as I.

Waller.

He faith these honours consisted in preserving their memories, and praising their virtues; but for any matter of worship towards them, he utterly denies it.

Our laws were for their matter foreign.

Stillin fleet.

Now for the government, it is absolute monarchy; there being no other laws in China but the king's command. Temple.

Hale.

For me, no other happiness I own,

Than to have born no ill to the throne.

Dryden.

For me, my stormy voyage at an end,

I to the port of death securely tend.

Dryden.

After death, we spright, have just such natures.

We had, for all the world, when human creatures.

Such little wafers, and yet so full of spite;

For bulk more insects, yet in mischief strong.

Tate.

Hobbes has given us a correct explanation of the sense in general; but for particulars and circumstances, he continually lops them.

Pope.

Lo, some are vellow, and the rest as good,

For all his lordship knows, but they are wood.

3. In this sense it has often as before it.

Pope.

As for Maramulus the general, they had no just cause to mislike him, being an old captain of great experience. Knutler.

4. In the character of.

If a man can be fully assured of any thing for a truth, without having examined, what is there that he may not embrace for truth?

Locke.

She thinks you favour'd:

But let her go, for an ungrateful woman.

A. Phillips.

Say, is it fitting in this very field,

This field, where from my youth I've been a carter,

I, in this field, should die for a deserter?

Gay.

5. With resemblance of.

I hear for certain, and do speak the truth,

The gentle York is up.

Shakspeare.

Now, now for sure, deliverance is at hand,

The kingdom shall to Israel be restor'd.

Milton.

The startling steed was seiz'd with sudden fright,

And, bounding, o'er the pommel cast the knight:

Forward he flew, and pitching on his head,

He quiver'd with his feet, and lay for dead.

Dryden.

6. Consider'd as; in the place of.

Our present lot appears

For happy, though but ill; for ill, not worst,

If we procure not to ourselves more woe.

Milton.

The council-table and star-chamber held for honourable that which pleas'd, and for just that which profited. Clarendon.

Read all the prefaces of Dryden,

For those our critics much confide in;

Though merely writ at first for fillings,

To raise the volume's price a shilling.

Swift.

7. In advantage of; for the sake of.

An ant is a wise creature for itself; but is a shrewd thing in an orchard.

Bacon.

He refused not to die for thine that killed him, and shed his blood for some of those that spilt it.

Bayle.

Whether some hero's fate,

In words thus dying for, he celebrate.

Cowley.

Shall I think the world was made for one,

And men are born for kings, as beasts for men,

Not for protection, but to be devour'd?

Dryden.

8. Conducive to; beneficial to.

It is for the general good of human society, and consequently of particular persons, to be true and just; and it is for mens health to be temperate.

Tillotson.

It can never be for the interest of a believer to do me a mischief, because he is sure, upon the balance of accounts, to find himself a loser by it.

Addison.

9. With intention of going to a certain place.

We sailed from Peru, where we had continued for the space of one whole year, for China and Japan, taking with us victuals for twelve months.

Bacon.

As she was brought for England, she was cast away near Harwich haven.

Hayward.

10. In comparative respect.

For tulks with Indian elephants he strove,
And Jove's own thunder from his mouth he drove. Dryd.

11. In proportion to.

As he could see clear, for those times, through superstition; so he would be blinded, now and then, by human policy. Bacon.

Your understandings are not bright enough for the exercise of the highest acts of reason. Tillotson.

12. With appropriation to.

Shadow will serve for Summer; prick him; for we have a number of shadows to fill up the muster-book. Shakespeare.

13. After O an expression of desire.

O for a muse of fire, that would ascend
The brightest heaven of invention! Shakespeare.

14. In account of; in solution of.

Thus much for the beginning and progress of the deluge. Burnet.

15. Inducing to as a motive.

There is a natural, immutable, and eternal reason for that which we call virtue, and against that which we call vice. Till.

16. In expectation of.

He must be back again by one and twenty, to marry and propagate: the father cannot stay any longer for the portion, nor the mother for a new set of babies to play with. Lucie.

17. Noting power or possibility.

For a holy person to be humble, for one whom all men esteem a saint, to fear lest himself become a devil, is as hard as for a prince to submit himself to be guided by tutors. Taylor.

18. Noting dependence.

The colours of outward objects, brought into a darkened room, depend for their visibility upon the dimness of the light they are beheld by. Boyle.

19. In prevention of;
- for*
- fear of.

The administration of this bank is for life, and partly in the hands of the chief citizens. Addison.

Since, hir'd for life, thy servile muse must sing

Successive conquests, and a glorious king;
And bring him laurels, whatsoever they cost. Prior.

The youth transported, asks without delay
To guide the sun's bright chariot for a day. Garth.

25. In search of; in quest of.

Some of the philosophers have run so far back for arguments of comfort against pain, as to doubt whether there were any such thing; and yet, for all that, when any great evil has been upon them, they would cry out as loud as other men. Tillotson.

26. According to.

Chymists have not been able, for aught is vulgarly known, by fire alone to separate true sulphur from antimony. Boyle.

27. Notwithstanding.

Nay, if you be an undertaker, I am for you. Shakespeare.
If he be brave, he's ready for the stroke. Dryden.

28. In hope of; for the sake of; noting the final cause.

How quickly nature
Falls to revolt, when gold becomes her object!
For this the foolish, over-careful fathers,
Have broke their sleeps with thought, their brains with care,
Their bones with industry: for this, engros'd
The canker'd heaps of strong achieved gold:
For this they have been thoughtful to invest
Their sons with arts and martial exercises. Shakespeare.
The kingdom of God was first rent by ill counsel; upon which counsel there are set, for our instruction, two marks. Bacon.

For he writes not for money, nor for praise,
Nor to be call'd a wit, nor to wear bays. Probleme.
There we shall see, a fight worthy dying for, that blessed Saviour, who so highly deserves of us. Boyle.
He is not dispos'd to be a fool, and to be miserable for company. Tillotson.

Even death's become to me no dreadful name;
In fighting fields, where our acquaintance grew,
I saw him, and content'd him his part for you. Dryden.

For this, 'tis needful to prevent her art,
And fire with love the proud Phœnician's heart. Dryden.

Some pray for riches; riches they obtain;
But watch'd by robbers, for their wealth are slain. Dryden.

Let them, who truly would appear my friends,
Employ their swords like mine for noble ends. Dryden.
Scholars are frugal of their words, and not willing to let any go for ornament, if they will not serve for use. Feins.

29. Of tendency to; towards.

so many good men in the winning of it by force. Knight.

The kettle to the top was hoist;
But with the upside down, to show
Its inclination for below. Saith.

30. In favour of; on the part of; on the side of.

Ye suppose the laws for which ye strive are found in scripture;
but those not against which ye strive. Huter.
It becomes me not to draw my pen in the defence of a bad cause, when I have so often drawn it for a good one. Dryden.

Jove was for Venus; but he fear'd his wife. Dryden.
He for the world was made, not us alone. Cowley.

They must be void of all zeal for God's honour, who do not with sighs and tears intercede with him. Swalbridge.

Aristotle is for poetical justice.
They are all for rank and foul feeding. Dennis.

31. Noting accommodation or adaptation.

Fortune, if there be such a thing as she,
Speaks that I bear so well her tyranny, Dennis.
That she thinks nothing else so fit for me. Dennis.

A few rules of logic are thought sufficient, in this case, for those who pretend to the highest improvement. Lucie.

It is for wicked men to dread God; but a virtuous man may have undisturbed thoughts, even of the justice of God. Tillotson.

His country has good havens, both for the Adriatick and Mediterranean. Addison.

Persia is commodiously situated for trade both by sea and land. Dimshaut.

Nor for my mankind, honesty, and wisdom,
To let you know my thoughts. Shakespeare.

Th' offers he doth make,
Were not for him to give, nor them to take. Dennis.

Jests for Dutchmen and English boys. Cowley.

Is it for you to ravage seas and land,
Unauthoriz'd by my supreme command! Dryden.

His fire already signs him for the skies,
And marks the seat amidst the deities. Dryden.

It is a reasonable account for any man to give, why he does not live as the greatest part of the world do, that he has no mind to die as they do, and perish with them. Tillotson.

34. Notwithstanding.

This, for any thing we know to the contrary, might be the self-same form which Philojudæus expresseth. Huter.

God's desertion shall, for ought he knows, the next minute supervene. Dennis.

Probability supposes that a thing may, or may not be so,
for any thing that yet is certainly determin'd on either side. Smith.

For any thing that legally appears to the contrary, it may be a contrivance to fright us. Saith.

If such vast masses of matter had been situated nearer to the sun, or to each other, as they might as easily have been, for any mechanical or fortuitous agent, they must necessarily have caused a considerable disorder in the whole system. Bentley.

35. For

35. FOR all. Notwithstanding.

Neither doubt you, because I wear a woman's apparel, I will be the more womanish; since I assure you, for all my apparel, there is nothing I desire more than fully to prove myself a man in this enterprize.

For all the carefulness of the Christians the English bulwark was undermined by the enemy, and upon the fourth of September part thereof was blown up.

But as Noah's pigeon, which return'd no more,
Did shew the footing found for all the flood,

They resolute, for all this, do proceed
Unto that judgment.

For all his exact plot, down was he cast from all his greatness, and forced to end his days in a mean condition.

If we apprehend the greatest things in the world of the emperor of China or Japan, we are well enough contented, for all that, to let them govern at home.

Though that very ingenious person has anticipated part of what I should say, yet you will, for all that, expect that I should give you a fuller account.

She might have pass'd over all such petty businesses; but the raising of my rable is not to be mumbled up in silence, for all her pertness.

36. To the use of; to be used in.

The oak for nothing ill,

The other good for twigs, the poplar for the mill.

In consequence of.

For love they force through thickets of the wood,

They climb the steepy hills and stem the flood.

In recompense of.

Now, for so many glorious actions done,

For peace at home, and for the publick wealth,

I mean to crown a bowl for Cæsar's health;

Besides, in gratitude for such high matters,

Know I have vow'd two hundred gladiators.

First the wily wizard must be caught;

For unconstrain'd, he nothing tells for naught.

In proportion to.

He is not very tall, yet for his years he's tall.

Exalted Socrates! divinely brave!

Injur'd he fell, and dying he forgave!

T'oo noble for revenge.

By means of; by interposition of.

Moral consideration can no way move the sensible appetite, were it not for the will.

Of some calamity we can have no relief but from God alone; and what would men do in such a case, if it were not for God?

In regard of; in preservation of. I cannot for my life, is, I cannot if my life might be saved by it.

I bid the rascal knock upon your gate;

But could not get him for my heart.

I cannot for my heart leave a room, before I have thoroughly examined the papers pass'd upon the walls.

For to. In the language used two centuries ago, for was commonly used before the sign of the infinitive mood, to note the final cause. As, I come for to see you, for I love to see you; in the same sense with the French pour. 'Tis it is used in the translation of the Bible. But this distinction was by the best writers sometimes forgotten; and for, by wrong use, appearing superfluous, is now always omitted.

Who shall tell me now

On this idle for to wreak my wrong?

A large posterity

Up to your happy palaces may mount,

Of blessed fairs for to increase the count.

These things may serve for to represent how just cause of fear this kingdom may have towards Spain.

For con.

1. The word by which the reason is given of something advanced before.

Heav'n doth with us as we with torches deal,

Not light them for themselves; for if our virtues

Do not go forth of us, 'twere all alike

As if we had them not

Old husbandmen I at Sabinum know,

Who for another year dig, plough, and sow;

For never any man was to be old,

But hop'd his life one Winter more would hold.

Tell me what kind of thing is wit?

For the first matter loves variety less.

'Tis thus does he who, for fear of any thing in this world, ventures to displease God; for in so doing he runs away from men, and falls into the hands of the living God.

Because; on this account that.

I doubt not but great troops would be ready to run; yet for that the worst men are most ready to remove, I would wish them chosen by discretion of wise men.

Jealous souls will not be answer'd to: so

They are not ever jealous for a cause,

But jealous for they're jealous.

Heaven defend your good souls, that you think

I will your serious and great business scant;
For she is with me.

Nor swell'd his breast with uncouth pride,

That heav'n on him above his charge had laid;

But, for his great Creator would the fame,

His will increas'd; so fire augmenteth flame.

Many excellencies of trees grow chiefly where the tree is dead or faded; for that the natural sap of the tree corrupteth into some preternatural substance.

For as much. In regard that; in consideration of.

For as much as in publick prayer we are not only to consider what is needful, in respect of God; but there is also in men that which we must regard; we somewhat incline to length, lest overquick dispatch should give occasion to deem, that the thing itself is but little accounted of.

For as much as the thirst is intolerable, the patient may be indulged the free use of spaw water.

For why. Because; for this reason that.

Solyman had three hundred fellows, that a camel might well carry one of them, being taken from the carriage; for why, Solyman purposing to draw the emperor unto battle, had brought no greater pieces of battery with him.

TO FORAGE. v. n. [from foris, abroad, Lat.]

1. To wander far; to rove at a distance.

Forage, and run

To meet displeasure farther from the doors,

And grapple with him, ere he come so nigh.

2. To wander in search of spoil, generally of provisions.

As in a stormy night,

Wolves, urged by their raging appetite,

Forage for prey.

There was a brood of young larks in the corn, and the dam went abroad to forage for them.

Nor dare they stray

When rain is promis'd, or a stormy day;

But near the city walls their waiting take,

Nor forage far, but short excursions make.

3. To ravage; to feed on spoil.

His most mighty father on his hill

Stood finiling, to behold his lion's whelp

Forage in blood of French nobility.

TO FORAGE. v. a. To plunder; to strip; to spoil.

They will both strengthen all the country round, and also be as continual holds for her majesty, if the people should revolt; for without such it is easy to forage and over-run the whole land.

FORAGE. n. f. [from forage, German and French, from foris, Latin.]

1. Search of provisions; the act of feeding abroad.

One way a band fleet from forage drives

A herd of bees, fair oxen, and fair kine,

From a fat meadow ground; or fleecy flock,

Ewes, and their bleating lambs, over the plains

Their booty.

2. Provisions sought abroad.

Some o'er the publick magazines preside,

And some are sent new forage to provide.

3. Provisions in general.

Provided forage, our spent arms renew'd.

FORAMINOUS. adj. [from foramen, Latin.] Full of holes; perforated in many places; porous.

Soft and foraminous bodies, in the first creation of the found, will decaden it; but in the passage of the found they will admit it better than harder bodies.

TO FORBEAR. v. n. pret. I forbore, anciently forbore; part.

forbarn. [copharnan, Saxon. For has in composition the power of privation; as, forbear; or deprivation; as, forbear, and other powers not easily explained.]

1. To cease from any thing; to intermit.

The wolf, and the lion, and the bear,

When they their prey in pieces tear,

To quarrel with themselves forbear.

2. To pause; to delay.

I pray you, tarry; pause a day or two,

Before you hazard; for in chusing wrong,

I lose your company; therefore forbear a while.

3. To omit voluntarily; not to do; to abstain.

He forbore to go forth.

At this he started, and forbore to swear;

Not out of conscience of the sin, but fear.

Who can forbear to admire and adore him who weighed the mountains in scales, and the hills in a balance.

4. To refrain any violence of temper; to be patient.

By long forbearing is a prince persuaded, and a soft tongue breaketh the bone.

TO FORBEAR. v. a.

1. To decline; to omit voluntarily.

Forbear his presence, until time hath qualified the heat of his displeasure.

So angry bulls the combat do forbear,

When from the wood a lion does appear.

2. To abstain from; to abstain to do.

If it passed only by the house of peers, it should be looked upon as invalid and void, and execution should be thereupon forborn or fulfilled. Clarendon.

There is not any one action whatsoever which a man ought to do, or to forbear, but the Scripture will give him a clear precept or prohibition for it. South.

3. To spare; to treat with clemency.
With all lowliness and meekness, with long suffering, forbearing one another in love. Ephesians.

4. To withhold.
Forbear thee from meddling with God, who is with me, that he destroy thee not. 2 Chron. i.

FORBEARANCE. n. f. [from forbear.]

1. The care of avoiding or shunning any thing; negation of practice.

True nobleness would Learn him forbearance from to foul a wrong. Shakespeare.

This may convince u: how vastly greater a pleasure is consequent upon the forbearance of sin, than can possibly accompany the commission of it. South.

Liberty is the power a man has to do, or forbear doing, any particular action, according as its doing, or forbearance has the actual preference in the mind. Locke.

2. Intermittion of frowning.
3. Command of temper.
Have a continent forbearance, 'till the speed of his rage goes slower. Shakespeare.

4. Lenity; delay of punishment; mildness.
Nor do I take notice of this instance of severity in our own country to justify such a proceeding, but only to display the mildness and forbearance made use of under the reign of his present majesty. Addison.

He applies to our gratitude by obligations of kindness and beneficence, of long suffering and forbearance. Rogers.

FORBEARER. n. f. [from fo bear.] An intermitter; inter-ceptor of any thing.

The Well as a father all goodness doth bring,
The East a forbearer, no manner of thing. Tupper.

TO FORBID. v. a. pret. I forbade; part. forbidden or forbid. [forbeban, Saxon; verbiiden, Dutch.]

1. To prohibit; to interdict any thing.
A witeh, a quean, an old cozening quean; have I not forbid her my house? Shakespeare.

By tasting of that fruit forbid,
Where they sought knowledge, they did error find. Davies.

The voice of reason, in all the dictates of natural morality, ought carefully to be attended to, by a strict observance of what it commands, but especially of what it forbids. South.

All hatred of persons, by very many Christian principles, we are most solemnly and indispensably forbid. Spratt.

The chaste and holy race
Are all forbidden this polluted place. Dryden.

2. To command to forbear any thing.
She with so sweet a rigour forbad him, that he durst not rebel. Sidney.

It is the shameful work of Hubert's hand,
The practice and the purpose of the king,
From whose obedience I forb d my foul. Shakespeare.

They have determined to consume all those things that God hath forbidden them to eat by his laws. Juarth.

3. To oppose; to hinder.
The moisture being forbidden to come up in the plant, stayeth longer in the root, and so dilateth it. Bacon.

The plaister alone would pen the humour, and so exasperate it as well as forbid new humour. Bacon.

Thy throne is darkness in th' abyss of light,
A blaze of glory that forbids the sight!
O teach me to believe thee thus conceal'd,
And search no farther than thyself reveal'd. Dryden.

4. To accurse; to blast. Now obsolete. To bid is in old language to pray; to forbid therefore is to curse.
Sleep shall neither night nor day
Hang upon his penthouse lid;
He shall live a man forbid. Shakespeare.

TO FORBID. v. n. To utter a prohibition.
That our renowned Rome
Should now eat up her own! Shakespeare.

Now the good gods forbid,
That our renowned Rome
Should now eat up her own! Shakespeare.

FORBIDDANCE. n. f. [from forbid.] Prohibition; edict against any thing.

How hast thou yielded to transgress
The strict forbiddance! how to violate
Th' sacred fruit forbidden! Milton.

FORBIDDENLY. adv. [from forbid.] In an unlawful manner.
With all confidence he swears, as he had seen't,
That you have touch'd his queen forbiddenly. Shakespeare.

FORBIDDEN. n. f. [from forbid.] One that prohibits; one that enacts a prohibition.
This was a bold accusation of God, making the fountain of good the contriver of evil, and the forbinder of the crime an abettor of the fact prohibited. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Other care, perhaps,

May have diverted from continual watch
Our great forbinder! Milton.

FORBIDDING. participle adj. [from forbid.] Railing abhorrence; repelling approach; causing aversion.
Tragedy was made forbidding and horrible. Hill.

FORB. E. n. f. [forer, French; fortis, Latin.]
1. Strength; vigour; might; active power.
He never could maintain his part but in the force of his will. Shakespeare.

A ship, which hath struck fail, doth run
By force of that force which before it won. Dune.

2. Violence.
Thus got the house of Lancaster the crown,
Which now they hold by force, and not by right. Shakespeare.

The shepherd Paris bore the Spartan bride
By force away, and then by force enjoy'd;
But I by free consent. Dryden.

3. Virtue; efficacy.
Manifest it is, that the very majesty and holiness of the place where God is worshipped, hath, in regard of us, great virtue, force and efficacy; for that it serveth as a sensible help to stir up devotion. Haller.

No definitions, no suppositions of any sect, are of force enough to destroy constant experience. Locke.

4. Validness; power of law.
A testament is of force after men are dead.
Not long in force this charter stood;
Wanting that seal, it must be feald in blood. Dryden.

5. Armament; warlike preparation. Often forces in the plural.
O thou! whose captain I account myself,
Look on my forces with a gracious eye. Shakespeare.

The secret of the power of Spain consisteth in a veteran army, compounded of miscellany forces of all nations. Bacon.

A greater force than that which here we find,
Ne'er preisd d the ocean, nor employ'd the wind. Waller.

Those victorious for-es of the rebels were not able to sustain your arms. Dryden.

11. To man; to strengthen by soldiers; to garrison.
Here

Here let them lye,

'Till famine and the ague eat them them up:
Were they not forc'd with those that should be ours,
We might have met them darest, beard to beard. Shakspeare.
If you find that any great number of soldiers be newly sent into Oronoque, and that the passages be already forc'd, then be well advised how you land. Raleigh.

11. To FORCE out. To extort.

The tricks used in convening synods might force out an expression from him, that did not carry all the respect due to those great names. Atterbury.

The heat of the dispute had forced out from him expressions that seemed to make his doctrine run higher than really it did. Atterbury.

To FORCE. v. n. To lay stress upon. This word I have only found in the following passage.

That morning that he was to join battle with Harold, his armor put on his backpiece before, and his breastplate behind; the which being espied by some that stood by, was taken among them for an ill token, and therefore advised him not to fight that day; to whom the duke answered, I force not of such fooleries; but if I have any skill in footfrying, as in foot I have none, is both prognosticate that I shall change copy from a duke to a king. C Camden.

Forcibly. adv. [from force.] Violently; constrainedly; unaturally.

This foundation of the earth upon the waters doth most aptly agree to that structure of the abyss and antediluvian earth; but very improperly and forcibly to the present form of the earth and the waters. Burnet.

Forciful. adj. [force and full.] Violent; strong; driven with great might; impetuous.

Why, what need we
Commune with you of this, but rather follow
Our forciful instigation? Shakspeare.

Against the steel he threw
His forciful spear, which, hissing as it flew,
Pierc'd through the yielding planks. Dryden.

Where it by chance, of forciful destiny,
Which forms in causes first what'er shall be,
Assist'd by a friend, one moonless night,
This Palamon from prison took his flight. Dryden.

He pois'd in air the jav'lin sent,
Through Paris' shield the forciful weapon went. Pope.

Bacon.

FOREFA'THER. n. f. [fore and father.] Ancestor; one who in any degree of ascending genealogy precedes another.

The custom of the people of God, and the decrees of our forefathers, are to be kept, touching those things whereof the Scripture hath neither one way or other given us charge.

If it be a generous desire in men to know from whence their own forefathers have come, it cannot be displeasing to understand the place of our first ancestor.

Raleigh.

Conceit is still deriv'd

From some forefather grief; mine is not so.

Shakespeare.

Shall I not be disfraught,
And madly play with my forefathers joints?
Our great forefathers

Shakespeare.

Had left him nought to conquer but his country.
When a man sees the prodigious pains our forefathers have been at in these barbarous buildings, one cannot but fancy what miracles of architecture they would have left us, had they been instructed in the right way.

Addison.

Blest peer! his great forefathers ev'ry grace

Reflecting, and reflected in his race.

TO FOREFEND. v. a. [fore and defend.]

Pope.

1. To prohibit; to avert.

To be so cruel to an humble foe?

If nature, then the may it mend with foil;

If will, then she at will may will forego.

Shakespeare.

Having all before absolutely in his power, it remains to still, he having already neither forgiven nor forego any thing thereby unto them, but having received something from them.

Shakespeare.

He is a great adventurer, said he,

That hath his sword through hard ally forego;

And now hath vowed, 'till he avenged be

Of that despite, never to wear none.

Spenser.

Special reason oftentimes causeth the will to prefer one good thing before another; to leave one for another's sake, to forego meaner for the attainment of higher degrees.

Hume.

Must I then leave you? Must I needs forego?

So good, so noble, and so true a matter!

Shakespeare.

Let us not forego

That for a trifle which was bought with blood.

Shakespeare.

How can I live without thee? how forego

Thy sweet converse, and love so dearly join'd,

To live again in these wild woods forlorn!

Milton.

This argument might prevail with you to forego a little of your repose for the publick benefit.

Dryden.

What they have enjoyed with great pleasure at one time, has proved insipid or nauseous at another; and therefore they see nothing in it, for which they should forego a present enjoyment.

Locke.

2. To go before; to be past. [from fore and go.]

By our remembrances of days foregone,

Such were our faults: O! then we thought them not. But

FORENAMED.

FORENAMED. adj. [fore and name.] Nominated before.

And such are fore ones,

Ben. Johnson.

As Curius, and the forenam'd Lentulus.

FORENOON. n. f. [fore and noon.] The time of day reckoned from the middle point, between the dawn and the meridian, to the meridian: opposed to afternoon.

The manner was, that the forenoon they should run at tilt;

the afternoon in a broad field in manner of a battle, 'till either the strangers or the country knights won the field. Sidney.

Curio, at the funeral of his father, built a temporary theatre, consisting of two parts turning on hinges, according to the position of the sun, for the convenience of forenoon's and afternoon's diversion. Arbutnot.

FORENOTICE. n. f. [fore and notice.] Information of an event before it happens.

So strange a revolution never happens in poetry, but either heaven or earth gives some forenotice of it. Rymer.

FORENSICK. adj. [forensis, Latin.] Belonging to courts of judicature.

Person is a forensic term, appropriating actions and their merit; and so belongs only to intelligent agents, capable of a law, and happiness and misery. This personality extends itself beyond present existence to what is past, only by coincidence.

The forum was a public place in Rome, where lawyers and orators made their speeches before the proper judges in matters of property, or in criminal cases: thence all sorts of disputations in courts of justice, where several persons make their distinct speeches, may come under the name of forensic disputes. Watts.

TO FOREORDAIN. v. a. [fore and ordain.] To predetermine;

to predetermine; to preordain.

The church can discharge, in manner convenient, a work of so great importance; by foreordaining some short collect wherein briefly to mention thanks. Hooker.

FOREPART. n. f. [fore and part.] The anterior part.

Had it been so raised, it would deprive us of the sun's light all the forepart of the day. Raleigh.

The ribs have no cavity in them, and towards the forepart or breast are broad and thin, to bend and give way without danger of fracture. Roy.

FOREPAST. adj. [fore and past.] Past before a certain time.

Now cease, ye damfels, your delights forepast;

Enough it is that all the day is yours. Spenser.

My forepast proofs, how'er the matter fall,

Shall tax my fears of little vanity, Shakespeare.

Having vainly fear'd too little.

Such is the treaty which he negotiates with us, an offer and tender of a reconciliation, an act of oblivion of all forepast

finis, and of a new covenant. Hammond.

FOREPOSSESS'D. adj. [fore and possession.] Preoccupied; pre-possessed; pre-engaged.

The testimony either of the ancient fathers, or of other classical divines, may be clearly and abundantly answered, to the satisfaction of any rational man, not extremely fore-possessed with prejudice. Sanderfon.

FORERANK. n. f. [fore and rank.] First rank; front.

Yet leave our cousin Catharine here with us;

She is our capital demand, compris'd Shakespeare.

Within the forerank of our articles.

FORERECITED. adj. [fore and recite.] Mentioned or enumerated before.

Bid him recount

The forerecited practices, whereof

We cannot feel too little, hear too much. Shakespeare.

TO FORERUN. v. a. [fore and run.]

1. To come before as an earnest of something following; to introduce as an harbinger.

Against ill chances men are ever merry;

But heav'n's fore us the good event. Shakespeare.

The sun

Was set, and twilight from the East came on,

Forerunning night. Milton.

She bids me hope: oh heav'n's, she pities me!

And pity still foreruns approaching love,

As lightning does the thunder. Dryden.

2. To precede; to have the start of.

I heard it to be a maxim at Dublin to follow, if not fore-run, all that is or will be practised in London. Graunt.

FORERUNNER. n. f. [from forerun.]

1. An harbinger; a messenger sent before to give notice of the approach of those that follow.

The six strangers seek for you, madam, to take their leave;

and there is a forerunner come from a seventh, the prince of Morocco. Shakespeare.

A cock was sacrificed as the forerunner of day and the sun, thenceby acknowledging the light of life to be derived from the divine bounty, the daughter of providence. Stillingfleet.

My elder brothers, my forerunners came,

Rough draughts of nature, ill design'd, and lame:

Blown off, like blossoms, never made to bear;

'Till I came finish'd, her last labour'd care. Dryden.

Already open prepares the way,

The sure forerunner of her gentle way. Pope.

2. A prognostick; a sign foreboding any thing.

O Eve! some further change awaits us nigh,

Which heav'n by these mute signs in nature, shows

Forerunners of his purpose. Milton.

Loss of sight is the misery of life, and usually the forerunner of death. Smith.

The keeping insensible perspiration up in due measure is the cause as well as sign of health, and the least deviation from that due quantity, the certain forerunner of a disease. Arbutnot.

TO FORESAW. v. a. [fore and say.] To predict; to prophesy; to foretell.

Let ordinance

Come as the gods foresay it. Shakespeare.

TO FORESEE. v. a. [fore and see.] To see beforehand; to see what has not yet happened; to have prescience; to fore-know.

With Cupid the foreseer and goes god Vulcan's pace. Sidney.

The first of them could things to come foresee;

The next, could of things present best advise;

The third, things past could keep in memory. Spenser.

If there be any thing foreseen that is not usual, be armed for it by any hearty though a short prayer, and an earnest resolution beforehand, and then watch when it comes. Taylor.

At his foreseen approach, already quake

The Caspian kingdoms and Meotian lake:

Their fears behold the tempest from afar,

And threat'ning oracles denounce the war. Dryden.

TO FORESHAME. v. a. [for and shame.] To shame; to bring reproach upon.

Oh bill, foreshaming

Those rich-left heirs, that let their fathers lie

Without a monument. Shakespeare.

TO FORESHAW. v. a. [See FORESHOW.]

FORESHIP. n. f. [fore and ship.] The anterior part of the ship.

The shipmen would have cast anchors out of the fore- ship. Acts xxvii. 30.

TO FORESHORTEN. v. a. [fore and shorten.] To shorten figures for the sake of shewing those behind.

The greatest parts of the body ought to appear foreshort;

and he forbids the foreshortening, because they make the parts appear little. Dryden.

TO FORESHOW. v. a. [fore and show.]

1. To discover before it happens; to predict; to prognosticate,

Christ had called him to be a witness of his death, and resurrection from the dead, according to that which the prophets and Moses had foreshown. Hunter.

Next, like Aurora, Spenser rose,

Whole purple blush the day foreshows. Dryden.

You chose to withdraw yourself from publick business, when the face of heaven grew troubled, and the frequent shifting of the wind foreshown a storm. Dryden.

2. To represent before comes.

What else is the law but the gospel foreshown? What other the gospel than the law fulfilled? Hunter.

FORESIGHT. n. f. [fore and sight.]

1. Prefcience; prognostication; foreknowledge. The accent anciently on the last syllable.

Let Eve, for I have drench'd her eyes,

Here sleep below; while thou to foresight wak'st!

As once thou slept'st, whilst the to life was form'd. Milton.

2. Provident care of futurity.

He had a sharp foresight, and working wait,

That never idle was, ne once could rest a whit. Spenser.

In matters of arms he was both skillful and industrious, and as well in foresight as resolution present and great. Harward.

Difficulties and temptations will more easily be born or avoided, if with prudent foresight we arm ourselves against them. Roy.

FORESIGHTFUL. adj. [foresight and ful.] Precient; provident.

Death gave him no such pangs as the foresightful care he had of his lilly succellor. Sidney.

TO FORESIGNIFY. v. a. [fore and signify.] To betoken beforehand; to foreshow; to typify.

Discoveries of Christ already present, whose future coming the Psalms did but foresignify. Hunter.

Yet as being past times noxious, where they light

On man, beast, plant, wasteful and turbulent,

They oft foresignify, and threaten ill. Milton.

FORESKIN. n. f. [fore and skin.] The prepuce.

Their own hand

And hundred of the faithless foe shall slay

And for a dow'r thy hundred foreskins pay, Cowley.

Be Michal thy reward.

FORESKIRT. n. f. [fore and skirt.] The pendulous or loose part of the coat before. A thousand

A thousand pounds a year for pure respect!

No other obligation?

That promises more thousands: honour's train

Is longer than his forefirt.

Shakespeare.

To FORESLACK. v. a. [fore and slack.] To neglect by idleness.

It is a great pity that so good an opportunity was omitted, and so happy an occasion forefacked, that might have been the eternal good of the land.

Spenser.

To FORESLAW. v. a. [fore and law.]

1. To delay; to hinder; to impede; to obstruct.

No stream, no wood, no mountain could forefaw

Fairfax.

Thir hasty pace.

Now the illutrious nymph return'd again,

Brings every grace triumphant in her train:

The wond'ring Nereids, though they rais'd no storm,

Forefaw her passage, to behold her form.

Dryden.

2. To neglect; to omit.

When the rebels were on Blackheath, the king knowing well that it flood him upon, by how much the more he had hitherto protracted the time in not encountering them, by so much the sooner to dispatch with them, that it might appear to have been no coldness in forefawing, but wisdom in chusing his time, resolved with speed to assail them.

Bacon.

Chremes, how many filters do you know

That rule their boats and use their nets aright,

That neither wind, nor time, nor tide forefaw?

Some such have been: but, ah! by tempests spite

Their boats are lost; while we may sit and moan

That few were such, and now these few are none.

Fletcher.

To FORESLAW. v. n. To be dilatory; to loiter.

This may plant courage in their quailing breasts,

For yet is hope of life and victory:

Forfaw no longer, make me hence again.

Shakespeare.

To FORESPEAK. v. n. [fore and speak.]

1. To predict; to forefay; to forewarn; to foretell.

Old Godfrey of Winchester, thinketh no ominous forefpeak-

ing to lie in names.

Cumden.

2. To forbid.

Thou hast forefpeak my being in these wars,

And say'st it is not fit.

Shakespeare.

FORESPENT, adj. [fore and spent.]

1. Wasted; tired; spent.

After him came spurring hard

A gentleman, almost forespent with speed.

Shakespeare.

2. Forepaid; paid.

Is not enough thy evil life forespent?

Spenser.

You shall find his vanities forespent,

Were but the outside of the Roman Brutus,

Covering discretion with a coat of folly.

Shakespeare.

3. Beilowed before.

We must receive him

According to the honour of his fender;

And towards himself, his goodness forespent on us,

We must extend our notice.

Shakespeare.

FORESPELLER. n. f. [fore and spell.] One that rides before.

A day in April never came so sweet,

To show how colly Summer was at hand,

As this forespeller comes before his lord.

Shakespeare.

FOREST. n. f. [forest, French; foresta, Italian.]

1. A wild uncultivated tract of ground, with wood.

By many tribulations we enter into the kingdom of heaven, because, in a forest of many wolves, sheep cannot chuse but feed in continual danger of life.

Hooker.

Macbeth shall never vanquish'd be, until

Great Birnam-wood to Dunsinane's high hill

Shall come against him.

— I hat will never be:

Who can impress the forest, bid the tree

Unfix his earth-bound root?

Shakespeare.

These be airs which the physicians advise their patients to remove unto, which commonly are plain champagnes, but grasses, and not overgrown with heath; or else timber-shales, as in forests.

Bacon.

How the first forest rais'd its shady head.

Roscommon.

2. [In law.] A certain territory of woody grounds and fruitful pastures, privileged for wild beasts, and fowls of forest, chase, and warren, to rest and abide in, in the safe protection of the king, for his pleasure; which territory of ground is bounded with irremovable marks, and replenished with beasts of venery or chase, and with great coverts of vert for their succour and abode: for the preservation of which place, vert, and venison, there are certain particular laws. The manner of making forests is this: the king sends out his commission, under the broad seal of England, directed to certain discreet persons, for viewing, perambulating, and bounding the place that he has a mind to affect: which returned into Chancery, proclamation is made throughout all the country where the ground lies, that none shall hunt or chase any wild beasts within that precinct, without the king's special licence; after which he appoints ordinaries, laws, and officers for the preservation of the vert and venison; and this becomes a forest by matter of record. The properties of a forest are these: a forest, as it is strictly taken, cannot be in the hands of any but the king, who hath power to grant commission to a justice in eyre for the forest; the courts; the officers for preserving the vert and venison, as the justices of the forest, the warden or keeper, the verders, the foresters, agilers, regarders, bailiffs, and beaules. The chief property of a forest is the swainmote, which is no less incident to it than the court of pycpowders to a fair.

Cruil.

To FORESTALL. v. a. [fore and stall, Saxon.]

1. To anticipate; to take up beforehand.

If thou be master-gunner, spend not all

That thou can'st speak at once; but husband it,

And give men turns of speech: do not forefistall

By lavishness thine own and others wit,

As if thou mad'st it thy will.

Harlet.

What need a man forefistall his date of grief,

And run to meet what he would most avoid.

Milton.

2. To hinder by preoccupation or prevention.

And though good luck prolonged hath thy date,

Yet death then would the like mishap forefistall.

Spenser.

What's in prayer, but this twofold force

To be forefistall'd ere we come to fall,

Or pardon'd being down.

Shakespeare.

This night forefistall him of the coming day.

Shakespeare.

But for my tears,

I had forefistall'd this dear and deep rebuke,

Ere you with grief had spoke.

Shakespeare.

If thou covest death as utmost end

Of misery, so thinking to evade

The penalty pronounc'd, doubt not but God

Hath wiselier arm'd his vengeful ire, than so

To be forefistall'd.

Milton.

I will not forefistall your judgment of the rest.

Pope.

3. To feize or gain possession of before another; to buy before another in order to raise the price.

He bold spoke, Sir knight, if knight thou be,

Abandon this forefistall'd place at erit,

For fear of further harm, I counsel thee.

Spenser.

FORESTALLER. n. f. [from forefistall.] One that anticipates the market; one that purchases before others to raise the price.

Commodities, good or bad, the workman must take at his master's rate, or sit still and starve; whilst, by this means, this new sort of ingroglers or forefistallers having the teeing and supplying this numerous body of workmen, let the price upon the poor landholder.

Locke.

FORESTOR. adj. [forest and born.] Born in a wild.

This boy is forestborn,

And hath been tutor'd in the rudiments

Of desperate studies.

Shakespeare.

FORESTIER. n. f. [forestier, French, from forest.]

1. An officer of the forest.

Forestier, my friend, where is the bush,

That we may stand and play the murderer in?

— Here by, upon the edge of yonder copice.

Shakespeare.

2. An inhabitant of the wild country.

FORESWART. adj. [from fore and swart, from swart.] Spent

FORESWART. adj. with heat.

Milo and Mopsa, like a couple of forefweat mellers, were getting the pure silver of their bodies out of the ore of their garments.

Sidney.

To FORETASTE. v. a. [fore and taste.]

1. To have anticipat of; to have preience of.

2. To taste before another.

Perhaps the fa

Is not so heinous now, foretasted fruit,

Profan'd first by the serpent, by him first

Made common, and unhallow'd, ere our taste.

Milton.

FORETASTE. n. f. Anticipation of.

A pleasure that a man may call as properly his own as his soul and his conscience, neither liable to accident, nor exposed to injury: it is the foretaste of heaven, and the earnest of eternity.

South.

To FORETELL. v. a. [fore and tell.]

1. To predict; to prophesy.

What art thou, whose heavy looks foretell

Some dreadful story hanging on thy tongue?

Shakespeare.

I found

The new-created world, which came in heaven

Long had foretold.

Milton.

Mercia's king,

Warn'd in a dream, his murder did foretell,

From point to point, as after it beel.

Dryden.

When great Ulysses fought the Phrygian shores,

Dreeds then undone my faithful tongue foretold;

Heaven seal'd my words, and you those deeds behold.

Pope.

2. To foretold; to foreshow.

To FORETELL. v. n. To utter prophecy.

All the prophets from Samuel, and those that follow after, have likewise foretold of these days. Abi.

FORETELLER. n. f. [from foretell.] Predicter; foreshower. Others are propoed, not that the foretold events should be known; but that the accomplishment that expounds them may evince, that the foreteller of them was able to foresee thee. Boyle.

To FORETHINK. v. a. [fore and think.] To anticipate in the mind; to have preience of.

The soul of every man
Prophetically does forethink thy fall.

Shakespeare.

I do pray to thee,

Thou virtuous Dauphin, alter not the doom
Forebought by heav'n.

Shakespeare.

Adam could not be ignorant of the punishments due to neglect and disobedience; and felt, by the proof thereof, in himself another terror than he had forebought, or could imagine. Raleigh.

Friday, the fatal day! when next it came,
Her soul forebought the fiend would change his game. Dryd.

To FORETHINK. v. n. To contrive beforehand.

With this you blot my name, and clear your own;

And what's my frenzy will be call'd my crime:

What then is thine? Thou couldest deliberate villain!

Thou wilest, forethinking, weighing politician! Smith.

FORETHOUGHT. n. f. [from forethink.]

1. Preience; anticipation.

He that is undone, is equally undone, whether it be by spitefulness of forethought, or by the folly of oversight, or evil counsel. L'Estrange.

2. Provident care.

To FORETHOUGHT. v. a. [fore and think.] To foreshow; to prognosticate as a sign.

The king from Ireland hastes; but did no good;

Whilst strange prodigious signs foretold blood. Daniel.

FORETHOUGHT. n. f. [from the verb.] Preventient sign; prognostick.

It may prove some ominous foretold of misfortune. Sidney.
They mislaid nothing more in king Edward the Confessor, than that he was Frenchified; and accounted the desire of foreign language then to be a foretold of bringing in of foreign powers, which indeed happened. Camden.

FORETHOUGHT. n. f. [fore and tooth.] The tooth in the anterior part of the mouth; is the incisor.

The foreteeth should be formed broad, and with a thin sharp edge like chizzles. Roy.

FORETOP. n. f. [fore and top.] That part of a woman's head-dress that is forward, or the top of a periwig.

So may your hats your foretops never press,

Untouch'd your ribbons, fac'd by your dres. Dryden.

FOREVOUCHED. part. [fore and vouch.] Affirmed before; formerly told.

Sure her offence

Must be of such unnatural degree,

That monsters it; or your forevouch'd affection

Fall'n into taint. Shakespeare.

FOREWARD. n. f. [fore and ward.] The van; the front.

They that marched in the foreward were all mighty men. Mac. ix. 11.

To FOREWARN. v. a. [fore and warn.]

1. To admonish beforehand.

I will forewarn you whom you shall fear: fear him which, after he hath killed, hath power to cast into hell. Luke.

2. To inform previously of any future event.

Divine interpreter, by favour sent

Down from the empyrean, to forewarn

Us timely of what might else have been our loss

Unknown. Milton.

3. To caution against any thing beforehand.

Well I will arm me, being thus forewarn'd. Shakespeare.

Thy pride,

And wand'ring vanity, when least was safe,

Rejected my forewarning, and disdain'd

Not to be truil'd. Milton.

Tho' Phœbus had forewarn'd him of singing wars, yet the search of nature was free. Dryden.

Young Chæribus, who by love was led

To win renown and fair Callandra's bed,

Had lately brought his troops to Priam's aid;

Forewarn'd in vain by the prophetic maid. Dryden.

To FOREWASTE. v. a. [fore and waste.] To desolate; to destroy. Out of use.

Vespasian, with great spoil and rage,

Forewast'd all, until Gemina gent

Persuaded him to cease. Spenser.

High time 'gan it wax for Una fair,

To think of those her captive parents dear,

And their forewast'd kingdom to repair. Spenser.

To FOREWISIT. part. [fore and visit.] To desire beforehand.

The wiser folk ceased not to do what in them lay, to procure that the good commonly forewisit might in time come to effect. Knox.

FOREWORN. part. [fore and worn, from wear.] Worn out; wasted by time or use. Knox.

Neither the light was enough to read the words, and the ink was already foreworn, and in many places blotted. Sidney.

FORFEIT. n. f. [forfeit, French; forfeit, Welsh.]

1. Something lost by the commission of a crime; something paid for expiation of a crime; a fine; a mulct.

Thy flanders I forgive, and therewithal

Remit thy other forfeit. Shakespeare.

'Th' execution leave to high disposal,

And let another hand, not thine, exact

Thy penal forfeit from thyself. Milton.

Thy life, Melantius! I am come to take,

Of which foul treason does a forfeit make. Waller.

2. A person obnoxious to punishment; one whose life is forfeited by his offence. Now obsolete.

Your brother is a forfeit of the law,

And you but wait for words. Shakespeare.

Claudio, whom here you have warrant to execute, is no greater forfeit to the law than Angelo, who hath sentenced him. Shakespeare.

To FORFEIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To lose by some fault of condition; to lose by some offence.

If then a man, on light conditions, gain

A great estate to him, and his, for ever;

If wilfully he forfeit it again,

Who doth bemoan his heir, or blame the giver? Denise.

Men displeased God, and consequently forfeit'd his right to happinefs. Boyle.

A father cannot alien the power he has over his child: he may perhaps to some degrees forfeit it, but cannot transfer

it. Locke.

FORFEIT. participial adj. [from the verb.] Liable to penal seizure; alienated by a crime; lost either as to the right or possession, by breach of conditions.

All the souls that are, were forfeit once;

And he that might the 'vantage best have took,

Found out the remedy. Shakespeare.

Beg that thou may'st have leave to hang thyself,

And yet, thy wealth being forfeit to the state,

Thou hast not left the value of a cord. Shakespeare.

This now fenceless world,

Forfeit to death. Milton.

Straight all his hopes exhil'd in empty smoke,

And his long toils were forfeit for a look. Dryden.

Methought with word's own ease he furrow'd his brow,

His forfeit honour, to betray the town. Dryden.

How the murder paid his forfeit breath;

What lands so distant from that scene of death,

But trembling heard the fame! Pope.

FORFEITABLE. adj. [from forfeit.] Possessed on conditions,

by the breach of which any thing may be lost.

FORFEITURE. n. f. [forfeiture, French; from forfeit.]

1. The act of forfeiting; the punishment discharged by loss of something possessed.

2. The thing forfeited; a mulct; a fine.

The court is as well a Chancery to save and deliver seizures, as a court of common law to decide rights; and these would be work enough in Germany and Italy, if Imperial forfeitures should go for good titles. Boyle.

Ancient privileges and acts of grace indulged by former kings, must not, without high reason, be revoked by their successors; not forfeitures be exacted violently, nor penal laws urged rigorously. Taylor.

He fairly abdicates his throne,

He has a forfeiture incur'd. Swift.

To FOREFEIND. v. a. To prevent; to forbid. Hawes.

FORGAVE. The pretreite of forgivess.

FORGE. n. f. [forge, French.]

1. The place where iron is beaten into form. In common language we use forge for large work, and smithy for small; but in books the distinction is not kept.

Now behold,

In the quick forge and working-house of thoughts,

How London doth pour out her citizens. Shakespeare.

In other part stood one, who at the forge

Labouring, two massy clods of iron and brass

Had melted. Milton.

Th' over-labour'd Cyclop from his task retires,

Th' Æolian forge exhausted of its fire. Pope.

2. Any place where any thing is made or shaped.

From no other forge hath proceeded a strange conceit, than to serve God with any set form of common prayer a superstitious. Hawes.

To FORGE. v. a. [forger, old French.]

1. To form by the hammer; to beat into shape.

The queen of martial,

And Mars himself conducted them; both which being forg'd of gold,

Must needs have golden furniture.

Chapman.

Tyger with tyger, bear with bear you'll find

In leagues offensive and defensive join'd;

But lawless man the anvil dares profane,

And forge that steel by which a man is slain,

Which carth at first for plough-flares did afford,

Nor yet the smith had learn'd to form a sword.

Tate.

2. To make by any means.

He was a kind of nothing, tideless,

'Till he had forg'd himself a name 't' th' fire

Of burning Rome.

Shakespeare.

His heart's his mouth:

What his breast forgets, that his tongue must vent. Shakespeare.

Those few names that the schools forgerd, and put into the mouths of their scholars, could never yet get admittance into common use, or obtain the licence of publick approbation.

Lisle.

3. To counterfeit; to falsify.

Were I king,

I should cut off the nobles for their lands:

My more having would be as fauce:

To make me hunger more, that I should forge

Quarrels unjust against the good and loyal,

Destroying them for wealth.

Shakespeare.

FORGER. n. f. [from forge.]

1. One who makes or forms.

2. One who counterfeits any thing; a falsifier.

As in stealing, if there were no receivers there would be no thieves; so in slander, if there were fewer spreaders, there would be fewer forgers of libels. Government of the Tongue.

No forger of lies willingly and wittingly furnishes out the means of his own detection. Wright.

FORGERY. n. f. [from forge.] The crime of falsification.

Has your king married the lady Gray?

And now, to sooth your forger and his,

Sends me a paper to persuade me patience. Shakespeare.

Nothing could have been earlier than for the Jews, the enemies of Jesus Christ, to have disproved these facts, had they been false, to have shown their falsehood, and to have convicted them of forgery. Stephens.

A forger, in setting a false name to a writing, which may prejudice another's fortune, the law punishes with the loss of ears; but has inflicted no adequate penalty for doing the same thing in print, though books fold under a false name are so many forgeries. Swift.

2. Smith's work; fabrication; the act of the forge.

He ran on embattl'd armies clad in iron,

And weaponless himself,

Made arms ridiculous, useless the forger

Of brazen shield and spear, the hammer'd cuirass,

Chalybean temper'd steel, and frock of mail

Adamantine proof.

Milton.

TO FORGET. v. a. preter. forgot; part. forgotten, or forgot.

[forgetan, Saxon; vergeten, Dutch.]

1. To lose memory of; to let go from the remembrance.

That is not forget

Which ne'er I did remember; to my knowledge,

I never in my life did look on him. Shakespeare.

When I am forgotten, as I shall be,

And sleep in dull cold marble, where no mention

Of me must more be heard. Shakespeare.

Oh, my oblivion is a very Anthony,

And I am all forgotten. Shakespeare.

Forget not thy friend in thy mind, and be not unmindful of him in thy riches. Et. luf.

No sooner was our deliverance compleated, but we forgot

our danger and our duty. Atterbury.

Alive, ridiculous; and dead, forgot,

Pope.

2. Not to attend; to neglect.

Can a woman forget her sucking child? Yea, they may for- get; yet will I not forget thee. Isaiah.

The mafs of mean forgotten things.

Anon.

FORGETFUL. adj. [from forget.]

1. Not retaining the memory of.

2. Causing oblivion; oblivious.

But when a thousand rolling years are past,

So long their punishments and penance last,

Whole droves of minds are by the driving god

Compell'd to drink the deep Lethæan flood,

In large forgetful draughts to sleep the cares

Of their past labours, and their illsome years. Dryden.

3. Inattentive; negligent; neglectful; careless.

Be not forgetful to entertain strangers. Hebrews.

The queen is comfortless, and we forgetful

In our long absence. Shakespeare.

Have you not love enough to bear with me,

When that rash humour, which my mother gave me,

Makes me forgetful?

I, in fact, a real interest have,

Which to my own advantage I would save;

And with the usual courtier's trick, intend

To serve myself, forgetful of my friend. Prior.

FORGETFULNESS. n. f. [from forgetful.]

1. Oblivion; cessation to remember; loss of memory.

O gentle sleep!

Nature's soft nurse, how have I frighted thee,

That thou no more wilt weigh my eyelids down,

And steep my senses in forgetfulness? Shakespeare.

All birds and beasts lie hush'd; sleep steals away

The wild desires of men and toils of day;

And brings, descending through the silent air,

A sweet forgetfulness of human care. Pope.

2. Negligence; neglect; inattention.

The church of England is grievously charged with forget- fulness of her duty. Hosier.

FORGETTER. n. f. [from forget.]

TO FORGIVE. v. a. [for-gi-an, Saxon.]

1. To pardon a person; not to punish.

Then heaven forgive him too! Shakespeare.

I do beseech your grace for charity;

If ever any malice in your heart

Were hid against me, now forgive me frankly.

—Sir Thomas Lovell, I as free forgive you,

As I would be forgiven; I forgive all. Shakespeare.

Slowly provok'd, she easily forgives. Prior.

2. To pardon a crime.

The people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity. Isaiah.

3. To remit; not to exact debt or penalty.

The lord of that servant was moved with compassion, loos'd him, and forgave him the debt. Matt.

FORGIVENESS. n. f. [for-gi-enness, Saxon.]

1. The act of forgiving.

To the Lord our God belong mercies and forgivenesses. Dan.

2. Pardon of an offender.

Thou hast promised repentance and forgiveness to them that have sinned against thee. Prayer of Manass.

Exchange forgiveness with me, noble Hamlet;

Mine and my father's death come not on thee,

Nor thine on me. Shakespeare.

Forgiveness to the injur'd does belong;

But they ne'er pardon who commit the wrong. Dryden.

3. Pardon of an offence.

God has certainly promised forgiveness of sin to every one who repents. South.

4. Tenderness; willingness to pardon.

Here are introduced more heroic principles of meekness, forgiveness, bounty and magnanimity, than all the learning of the heathens could invent. Spratt.

Mercy above did hourly plead

For her resemblance here below;

And mild forgiveness intercede

To stop the coming blow. Dryden.

Remission of a fine or penalty.

FORGIVER. n. f. [from forgive.] One who pardons.

FORGOT. part. pass. of forget. Not remembered.

FORGOTTEN. part. pass. of forget. Not remembered.

This song shall not be forgotten. Deut.

Great Safford! worthy of that name, though all

Of thee could be forgotten, but thy fall. Devenant.

The lost ideas of the cheerful note,

Lightly receiv'd, were easily forgot. Prior.

TO FORGATE. v. a. [An old word. Probably for for-gate, from for and gate.] To harrafs; tear; torment.

All this long tale

Nought catch the care that doth me for-gate. Spenser.

FORK. n. f. [furca, Latin; forch, Welsh; forche, French.]

1. An instrument divided at the end into two or more points or prongs, used on many occasions.

At Midsummer down with the brembles and brakes,

And after abroad with thy forks and thy rakes. Tuff.

The vicar first, and alter him the crier,

With forks and slaves the felon to pursue,

Ran Coll our dog. Dryden.

I dine with forks that have but two prongs. Swift.

2. It is sometimes used for the point of an arrow.

The bow is bent and drawn: make from the shaft.

—Let it fall rather, though the fork invade

The region of my heart. Shakespeare.

3. A point of a fork.

Several are amazed at the wisdom of the antients that represented a thunderbolt with three forks, since nothing could have better explained its triple quality of piercing, burning, and melting. Addison.

TO FORK. v. n. [from the noun.] To shoot into blades, as corn does out of the ground. The

The corn beginneth to fork. Mortimer.
FORKED. adj. [from fork.] Opening into two or more parts.
 When he was maked he was, for all the world, like a forked fool, rashly, with a head fantastically carved upon it with a knife. Shakespeare.

Sometimes we see a cloud that's dragonish,
 A forked mountain, or blue promontory. Shakespeare.
 Come, shall we go and kill us venison?
 And yet it irks me the poor dappled fools
 Should, in their own confines, with forked heads,
 Have their round haunches gored. Shakespeare.

He would have spoke;
 But his for his return'd, with forked tongue Milton.
 To forked tongue.
 Ye dragons, whose contagious breath
 Peoples the dark retreats of death,
 Change your fierce hissing into joyful song.

And praise your maker with your forked tongue. Ressemment.
FORKEDLY. adv. [from forked.] In a forked form.
FORKEDNESS. n. f. [from forked.] The quality of opening into two parts.

FORKHEAD. n. f. [fork and head.] Point of an arrow.
 It seizing, no way enter might;
 Eut back rebounding, left the forkhead keen,
 Effoons it fled away, and might no where be seen. Spenser.
FORKY. adj. [from fork.] Forked; furcated; opening into two parts.

The smiling infant in his hand shall take
 The crested basilisk and speckled snake;
 Pleas'd the green lustre of the scales survey,
 And with their forky tongue and pointless sting shall play. Pope.

FORKORE. [The preterite and participle of the Saxon forleorpan, in Dutch verloren.] Dejected; forsook; forsaken.
 Such as Diana by the sandy shore
 Of swift Eurotas, or on Cynthus' green,
 Where all the nymphs have her forlore. Spenser.

That wretched world he 'gan for to abhor,
 And mortal life 'gan loath, as thing forlore. Spenser.
 Thus fell the trees, with noise the deserts roar;
 The beasts their caves, the birds their nests forlore. Fairf.

FORLORN. adj. [from forleorn, from forleorpan, Saxon; verloren, Dutch.]
 1. Dejected; destitute; forsaken; wretched; helpless; solitary.

Make them seek for that they want to scorn;
 Of fortune and of hope at once forloren. Spenser.
 Tell me, good Hobbinol, what pangs thee greet?
 What! hath some wolf thy tender lambs yorn?
 Or is thy baggage broke, that sounds so sweet?
 Or art thou of thy loved lads forloren? Spenser.

In every place was heard the lamentation of women and children;
 every thing shewed the heaviness of the time, and seemed as altogether lost and forloren. Knollet.
 How can I live without thee? how forego
 Thy sweet converse, and love so dearly join'd,
 To live again in these wild woods forloren! Milton.

Their way
 Lies through the perplex'd paths of this drear wood;
 The nodding horror of whose shady brows,
 Threats the forloren and wand'ring passenger. Milton.

My only strength and stay! forloren of thee,
 Whither shall I betake me, where subsist?
 Like a declining state-man, left forloren Milton.

To his friends pity and pursuers scorn. Danham.
 The good old man, forloren of human aid,
 For vengeance to his heav'nly patron pray'd.

Philomel lam. his forloren. Dryden.
 As some sad turtle his lost love deplores,
 Thus, far from Delia, to the winds I mourn;
 Alike unheard, un pity'd, and forloren. Pope.

2. Left; desolate.
 What is become of great Acrates' son?
 Or where hath he hung up his mortal blade,
 That hath so many haughty conquests won?
 Is all his force forloren, and all his glory done? Spenser.

 And forc'd to live in Scotland a forloren. Shakespeare.

2. FORLOREN. Hope. The soldiers who are sent first to the attack, and are therefore doomed to perish.
 Critics in plume,
 Who lolling on our foremost benches sit,
 And still charge forth the true forloren of wit. Dryden.

FORLORENNESS. n. f. [from forloren.] Dejection; misery; solitude.

Men displeased God, and consequently forfeited all right to happiness; even whilst they complicated the forlorenness of their condition by the legercy of not being sensible of it. Boyle.

TO FORLIVE. v. n. [from for and live.] To live across.

Knit with a golden baldric, which forlay
 Athwart her snowy breast, and did divide
 Her dainty paps, which, like young fruit in May,
 Now little 'gan to swell; and being y'd,
 Through her thin weed, their places only signify'd. Spenser.

FORM. n. f. [forma, Latin; forme, French.]
 1. The external appearance of any thing; representation; shape.

Nay, women are frail too.
 —Ay, as the glasses where they view themselves,
 Which are as easy broke as they make forms. Shakespeare.
 It flood still; but I could not discern the form thereof. Jak.
 Gold will endure a vehement fire, without any change, and after it has been divided by corrosive liquors into invisible parts; yet may presently be precipitated, so as to appear again in its form. Grew.

Matter, as wife logicians say,
 Cannot without a form subsist;
 And form, say I as well as they,
 Must fail, if matter brings no gift. Swift.

2. Being, as modified by a particular shape.
 When noble benefits shall prove
 Not well dispos'd, the mind grown once corrupt,
 They turn to vicious forms, ten times more ugly
 Than ever they were fair. Shakespeare.

Here toils and death, and death's half-brother, sleep,
 Forms terrible to view, their sentry keep;
 With axious pleasures of a guilty mind,
 Deep sliauds before, and open force behind. Dryden.

3. Particular model or modification.
 He that will look into many parts of Asia and America, will find men reason there perhaps as acutely as himself, who yet never heard of a syllogism, nor can reduce any one argument to those forms. Leis.

It lengthens out every act of worship, and produces new lasting and permanent impressions in the mind, than those which accompany any transient form of words that are altered in the ordinary method of religious worship. Allen.

4. Beauty; elegance of appearance.
 He hath no form nor comeliness. Mich.

5. Regularity; method; order.
 What he spoke, though it lack'd form a little, Shakespeare.
 Was not like madness.

6. External appearance without the essential qualities; empty show.

Then those whom form of laws
 Condemn'd to die, when traitors judg'd their ends. Dant.
 They were young heirs sent only for form to schools, where they were not suffered to stay three months in the year. Swift.

7. Ceremony; external rites.

Though well we may not pass upon his life,
 Without the form of justice; yet our post
 Shall do a courtly or our wrath, which men
 May blame, but not controul. Shakespeare.

A long table, and a square table, or seat about the walls seem things of form, but are things of subsistence; for at a long table, a few at the upper end, in effect, sway all the business;
 but in the other form, there is more use of the consultation opinions that sit lower. Leis.

That the parliaments of Ireland might want no decent or honourable form used in England, he carried a particular act to pass that the lords of Ireland should wear in parliament robes. Daniel.

Their general used, in all dispatches made by observe all decency in their forms. Leis.

How am I to interret, fit, this visit?
 Is it a compliment of forms, or love? A. Philip.

8. Stated method; established practice.
 He who affirmeth (such to be necessary) amongst all men, throughout the world, doth not thereby import that all men must necessarily speak one kind of language; even so the neccessity of policy and regimen in all churches may be held without holding any one certain form to be necessary in them all. Hein.

Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to fit and hinder the spirit of prayer and devotion, than unaccommodated and confused variety to distract and lose it. King Charles.

Nor seek to know
 Their process, or the forms of law below. Dryden.

9. A long seat.
 If a chair be defined a seat for a single person, with back belonging to it, then a stool is a seat for a single person without a back; and a form is a seat for several persons, without a back. Milton.

I was seen with her in the manorhouse, sitting with her upon the form, and taken following her into the park. Shakespeare.

10. A class; a rank of students.

It will be necessary to feed and examine those works which have given so great a reputation to the masters of the first form.

Dryden's Duplicity.

11. The test or bed of a hare.

Now for a clod-like hare in form they peer;

Now bolt and cudgel squirrels leap do move;

Now the ambitious lark, with murrur clear,

They catch, while he, fool! to himself makes love. Sidney.

Have you observ'd a fitting hare,

Lift him'd, and fearful of the storm

Of hounds and hounds, clap back her ears,

Afraid to keep or leave her form. Prior.

12. Form is the essential, specific, or distinguishing modification of the matter of which any thing is composed, so as thereby to give it such a peculiar manner of existence. Harris. In definitions, whether they be framed larger to augment, or stricter to abridge the number of fragments, we find grace expressly mentioned as their true essential form, and elements as the matter whereunto that form doth adjoin itself. Hosker.

They inferred, if the world were a living creature, it had a soul and spirit, by which they did not intend God, for they did admit of a deity besides, but only the soul or essential form of the universe. Bacon.

13. A formal cause; that which gives essence.

FORM. v. a. [forma, Latin.]

1. To make out of materials.

God formed man of the dust of the ground.

The form'd the phantom of well-bodied air. Genesi.

2. To model to a particular shape. Pope.

Lucretius taught him not to form his hero, to give him piety or valour for his manners. Dryden.

4. To arrange; to combine in any particular manner: as, he formed his troops.

5. To adjust; to settle.

Our differences with the Romanists are thus formed into an interest, and become the design not of single persons, but of corporations and successions. Decay of Piety.

6. To contrive; to contrive.

The defeat of the design is the routing of opinions formed for promoting it. Decay of Piety.

And fate, if possible, must be delay'd;

The thought that labours in my forming brain,

Yet crude and immature, demands more time. Rever.

7. To model by education or institution.

Let him to this with easy pains be brought,

And seem to labour when he labours not;

'Tis thus form'd for speed, he challenges the wind,

And leaves the Scythian arrow far behind. Dryden.

FORMAL, adj. [formal, French; formalis, Latin.]

1. Ceremonious; solemn; precise; exact to affectation.

The justice,

In fair round belly, with good capon lin'd,

With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,

Full of wise saws and modern instances,

And so he plays his part. Shakspeare.

Formal in apparel,

In gait and countenance surely like a father. Shakspeare.

Ceremonies especially be not to be omitted to strangers and formal natures; but the exalting them above the mean is not only tedious, but doth diminish the credit of him that speaks. Bacon's Essays.

2. Done according to established rules and methods; not irregular; not sudden; not extemporaneous.

There is not any positive law of men, whether it be general or particular, received by formal express consent, as in councils; or by secret approbation, as in customs it cometh to pass, but the same may be taken away, if occasion serve. Hosker.

As there are formal and written leagues, respective to certain enemies; so there is a natural and tacit confederation amongst all men against the common enemy of human society, so as there needs no intimation or denunciation of the war; but all these formalities the law of nature supplies, as in the case of pyrates. Bacon.

3. Regular; methodical.

The formal stars do travel so,

As we their names and courses know;

And he that on their changes looks,

Would think them govern'd by our books. Waller.

4. External; having the appearance but not the essence.

Of formal duty, make no more thy boast;

Thou disobey'st where it concerns me most. Dryden.

5. Depending upon establishment or custom.

Still in constraint your suffering sex remains,

Or bound in formal or in real chains. Pope.

6. Having the power of making any thing what it is; constitutive; essential.

Of letters the material part is breath and voice: the formal is constituted by the motions and figure of the organs of speech affecting breath with a peculiar sound, by which each letter is discriminated. Hilder.

N° LVIII.

Bellarmino agrees in making the formal act of adoration to be subjection to a superior; but withal he makes the mere apprehension of excellency to include the formal reason of it: whereas mere excellency, without superiority, doth not require any subjection, but only estimation. Sul in f. t.

The very life and vital motion, and the formal essence and nature of man, is wholly owing to the power of God. Bentley.

7. Retaining its proper and essential characteristic.

Thou shouldest come like a fury cover'd with snakes, Shakspeare.

Not like a formal man.

'Till I have us'd th' approved means I have;

With wholesome tytrups, drugs, and holy prayers, Shakspeare.

To make of him a formal man again.

FORMALIST, n. s. [formaliste, French; from form] One who practises external ceremony; one who pretends appearance to reality; one who seems what he is not. Shakspeare.

It is a ridiculous thing, and fit for a satyr to persons of judgment, to see what shifts formalists have, and what prospectives to make superfcies to seem a body that hath depth and bulk. Bacon's Essays.

A grave, stanch, skilfully managed face, set upon a grasping ing alpiring mind, having got many a fly formalist the reputation of a primitive and severe piety. Saunders.

FORMALITY, n. s. [formalite, French; from form.]

1. Ceremony; established mode of behaviour.

The attire, which the minister of God is by order to use at times of divine service, is but a matter of mere formality, yet such as for comeliness sake hath hitherto been judged not unnecessary. Hosker.

Formalities of extraordinary zeal and piety are never more studied and elaborate than in desperate designs. K. Charles.

Many a worthy man sacrifices his peace to formality of compliment and good manners. L'Estrange.

Nor was his attendance on divine offices a matter of formality and custom, but of conscience. Atterbury.

2. Solemn order, habit, or dress.

If men tortwear the deeds and bon's they draw,

Though sign'd with all formality of law;

And though the signing and the seal proclaim

The barefaced perjury, and fix the shame. Dryden.

The pretender would have infallibly landed in our northern parts, and found them all fat down in their formalities, as the Gauls did the Roman senators. Saunders.

3. Essence; the quality by which any thing is what it is.

To fix on God the formality of faculties, or affections, is the imposture of our fancies, and contradictory to his divinity. Saunders.

May not a man vow to A and B, that he will give a hundred pound to an hospital? Here the vow is made both to God and to A and B. But here A and B, are only witnesses to the vow; but the formality of the vow lies in the promise made to God. Saunders.

TO FORMALIZE, v. a. [formalize, French; from form.]

1. To model; to modify. A word not now in use.

The same Spirit which anointed the blessed soul of our Saviour Christ, doth so formalize, unite, and actuate his whole race, as if both he and they were so many limbs compacted into one body. Hosker.

2. To affect formally; to be fond of ceremony.

FORMALLY, adv. [from formal.]

1. According to established rules, methods, ceremonies or rites.

Formally, according to our law,

Depose him. Shakspeare.

2. Ceremoniously; stiffly; precisely.

To be stiff and formally reserved, as if the company did not deserve our familiarity, is a downright challenge of homage. Collier on Pride.

3. In open appearance; with visible and apparent show.

You and your followers do stand formally divided against the authorized guides of the church, and the rest of the people. Hosker.

4. Essentially; characteristically.

This power and dominion is not adequately and formally the image of God, but only a part of it. Saunders.

The Heathens and the Christians may agree in material acts of charity; but that which formally makes this a Christian grace, is the spring from which it flows. Saunders.

FORMATION, n. s. [formation, French; from forma, Latin.]

1. The act of forming or generating.

The matter discharged forth of vulcan's, and other spiracles, contributes to the formation of meteors. Woodward.

The solids are originally formed of a fluid, from a small point, as appears by the gradual formation of a fetus. Arb.

Complicated ideas, growing up under observation, give not the same confusion, as if they were all offered to the mind at once, without your observing the original and formation of them. Watt's Improvement of the Mind.

2. The manner in which a thing is formed.

The chorion, a thick membrane obscuring the formation, the dam doth tear asunder. Brown.

FOR

FORMATIVE. adj. [from forms, Latin.] Having the power of giving form; plastic.

As we have established our assertion of the femal production of all kinds of animals; so likewise we affirm, that the meanest plant cannot be raised without seed, by any formative power residing in the soil.

FORMER. n. f. [from form] He that forms; maker; contriver; planner.

The wonderful art and providence of the contriver and former of our bodies, appears in the multitude of intentions he must have in the formation of several parts for several uses.

FORMER. adj. [from forma, Saxon, first; whence former, and formyl now commonly written foremost, as it derived from before. Formyl is generally applied to place, rank, or degree, and former only to time; for when we say, the last rank of the procession is like the former, we respect time rather than place, and mean that which we saw before, rather than that which had precedence in place.]

1. Before another in time.

Thou other gold-bound brow, is like the first:

—A third is like the former.

Shakspeare.

2. Mentioned before another.

A bad author deserves better usage than a bad critic: a man may be the former merely through the misfortune of an ill judgment; but he cannot be the latter without both that and an ill temper.

Pope.

3. Past: as, this was the custom in former times.

FORMERLY. adv. [from former.] In times past.

The places mentioned were all of them formerly the cool retreats of the Romans, where they used to hide themselves among the woods and mountains, during the excessive heats of their Summer.

Addison.

As an animal degenerates by diseases, the animal falls, formerly benign, approach towards an alkaline nature. Arbutnot.

FORMIDABLE. adj. [from formidabilis, Latin; formidabile, Fr.]

Terrible; dreadful; tremendous; terrific; to be feared.

I swell my preface into a volume, and make it formidable, when you see to many pages behind.

Dryden.

They seem'd to fear the formidable fight,

And roll'd their billows on, to speed his flight.

Dryden.

FORMIDABLENESS. n. f. [from formidabile.]

1. The quality of exciting terror or dread.

2. The thing causing dread.

They rather chafe to be shew'd the formidableness of their danger, than, by a blind embracing it, to perish in it.

Decay of Piety.

FORMIDABLY. adv. [from formidabile.] In a terrible manner.

Behold! 'e'en to remote shores,

A conquering navy proudly spread;

The British cannon formidably roars.

Dryden.

FORMLESS. adj. [from form.] Shapeless; without regularity of form.

All form is formless, order orderless,

Save what is opposite to England's love.

Shakspeare.

FORMULARY. n. f. [from formulaire, French; from formula.] A book containing stated and prescribed models or set forms.

FORMULE. n. f. [from formula, French; formula, Latin.] A set or prescribed model.

TO FORNIFICATE. v. a. [from fornix, Latin.] To commit lewdness.

It is a new way to fornicate at a distance.

Brown.

FORNICATION. n. f. [from fornication, French; fornicatio, Latin.]

1. Concubinage or commerce with an unmarried woman.

Blas me! what a fry of fornication is at the door.

Shakspeare.

The law ought to be strict against fornications and adulteries; for, if there were universal licence, the increase of mankind would be but like that of foxes at bells.

Graunt.

2. In scripture, sometimes idolatry.

Thou dost trust in thine own beauty, and playedst the harlot, because of thy renown, and pouredst out thy fornications on every one that passed by.

Ezekiel.

FORNICATOR. n. f. [from fornicateur, French; from fornix, Latin.]

One that has commerce with unmarried women.

'Twas now the time when first Saul God forsake,

God Saul; the room in his heart wild passions took.

Cowley.

Oreilles comes in time

To save your honour: Pyrrhus cools space;

Prevent his falshood, and forsake him first:

I know you hate him.

Philips.

Daughter of Jove! whose arms in thunder wild

Th' avenging bolt, and shake the dreadful shield,

FOR

Forsack by thee, in vain I fought thy aid.

Pope.

2. To leave; to go away from; to depart from.

Unwilling I forsake your friendly state,

Commanded by the gods, and forc'd by fate.

Dryden.

3. To desert; to fail.

Truth, modesty, and shame the world forsake;

Fraud, avarice, and force their places took.

Dryden.

When ev'n the flying fables were seen no more,

Forsaken of all light she left the shore.

Dryden.

'I heir purple majesty,

And all those outward shows which we call greatness,

Languish and droop, seem empty and forsaken,

And draw the wond'ring gazers eyes no more.

Rieu.

FORSAKER. n. f. [from forsake.] Defector; one that forsakes.

Thou didst deliver us into the hands of lawless enemies, most hateful forsakers of God.

Aparaph.

FORSOOTH. adv. [from forsooth, Saxon.]

1. In truth; certainly; very well. It is used almost always in an ironical or contemptuous sense.

Wherefore doth Lyfander

Deny your love, so rich within his soul,

And tender me, forsooth, affection?

Shakspeare.

A fit man, forsooth, to govern a realm, who had so goodly government in his own estate.

Hayward.

Unlearned persons use such letters as justly express the power or sound of their speech; yet forsooth, we say, write not true English, or true French.

Haller.

In the East-Indies a widow, who has any regard to her character, throws herself into the flames of her husband's funeral pile, to shew, forsooth, that she is faithful to the memory of her deceased lord.

Addison.

She would cry out murder, and disturb the whole neighbourhood; and when John came running down the stairs to enquire what the matter was, nothing, forsooth, only her maid had stuck a pin wrong in her gown.

Arbutnot.

Some question the genuineness of his books, because, forsooth, they cannot discover in them that flumen arbutnot that Cicero speaks of.

Baker.

2. It is supposed to have been once a word of honour in address to women. It is probable that an inferior, being called, shew'd his attention by answering in the word yes, forsooth, which in time lost its true meaning; and instead of a mere exclamationary interjection, was supposed a compellation. It appears in Shakspeare to have been used likewise to men.

Our old English word forsooth has been changed for the French madam.

Guardian.

TO FORSWEAR. v. a. pret. forsware; part. forsworn. [forswarian, Saxon.]

1. To renounce upon oath.

I firmly vow

Never to wooe her more; but do forswear her,

As one unworthy all the former favours,

That I have fondly flatter'd her withal.

Shakspeare.

2. To deny upon oath.

And that self chafin about his neck,

Which he forswore most monstrously to have.

Shakspeare.

Observe the wretch who hath his faith forsook,

How clear his voice, and how assur'd his look!

Like innocence, and as serenely bold

As truth, how loudly he forswears thy gold!

Dryden.

3. With the reciprocal pronoun: as, te forswear himself; to be perjured; to swear falsely.

To leave my Julia, shall I be forsworn?

To love fair Silvia, shall I be forsworn?

To wrong my friend, shall I be much forsworn?

And ev'n that power which gave me first my oath,

Provokes me to this threefold perjury.

Shakspeare.

One says, he never should endure the sight

Of that forsworn, that wrongs both land and laws.

I too have sworn, ev'n at the altar sworn,

Eternal love and endless faith to Thebus;

And yet am false, forsworn: the hollow'd shrine,

That heard me swear, is witness to my falshood.

Smith.

TO FORSWEAR. v. n. To swear falsely; to commit perjury.

Take heed; for he holds vengeance in his hand,

To hurl upon their heads that break his law.

—And that same vengeance doth hurl on thee,

For false forswearing, and for murder too.

Shakspeare.

FORSWEARER. n. f. [from forswear.] One who is perjured.

FORT. n. f. [from fort, French.] A fortified house; a castle.

They erected a fort, which they called the fort de la croix; and from thence they bolted like beasts of the forest.

Bacon.

Now to their fort they are about to fend

For the loud engines which their life defend.

Waller.

He that views a fort to take it,

Plants his artillery 'gainst the weakest part.

My fury does, like jealous forts, pursue

With death, ev'n strangers who but come to view.

FORTED. adj. [from fort.] Furnished or guarded by forts.

Not used now.

Year

Your desert speaks loud, and I should wrong
To lock it in the wads of covert bosom,
When it deserves with characters of brass
A forted residence, 'gainst the tooth of time
And rature of oblivion. Shakspeare, Measure for Measure.

FORTH. adv. [propo, saxon, whence further and forthwith.]

1. Forward; onward in time.
From that day forth I lov'd that face divine;
From that day forth I call in careful mind
To seek her out. Fairy Queen.

2. Forward in place or order.
Look at the second admonition, and so forth, where they speak in most unchristian manner. Whitgift.

Mad Pandarus flees forth, with vengeance vow'd
For Bitias' death. Dryden.

3. Abroad; out of doors.
Uncle, I must come forth. Shakspeare, Othello.
I have no mind of feasting forth to-night. Shakspeare.

Attend you here the door of our stern daughter?
Will she not forth? Shakspeare.
When winter past, and summer scarce begun,
Invites them forth to labour in the sun. Dryden.

4. Out away; beyond the boundary of any place.
They will privily relieve their friends that are forth; they will lead the enemy secret advertisements; and they will not also fail to draw the enemy privily upon them. Spenser.

Even that sunshine brew'd a show'r for him,
That wash'd his father's fortune forth of France. Shakspeare.

5. Out into public state; public view.
You may set forth the fame with farmhouses. Peacocks.
But when your troubled country call'd you forth,
Your flaming courage, and your matchless worth,
To force contention gave a prosperous end. Waller.

6. Thoroughly; from beginning to end.
You, cousin,
Whom it concerns to hear this matter forth,
Do with your injuries as seems you best. Shakspeare.

7. To a certain degree.
Hence we learn, how far forth we may expect justification and salvation from the sufferings of Christ; no farther than we are wrought on by his renewing grace. Hammond.

8. On to the end.
I repeated the Ave Maria: the inquisitor bad me say forth;
I said I was taught no more. Alembic in Syria.

FORTH. prep. Out of.
And here's a prophet, that I brought with me
From forth the streets of Pomefret. Shakspeare.

Some forths their cabins peep,
And trembling ask what news, and do hear so
As jealous husbands what they would not know. Donne.

FORTHCOMING. adj. [forth and coming.] Ready to appear;
not abiding; not loth.

Carry this mad knave to jail: I charge you see that he be forthcoming. Shakspeare, Taming of the Shrew.

We'll see your tinklers here forthcoming all. Shakspeare.

FORTHGANGING. adj. [forth and gange.] Coming out; coming forward from a covert.

Forthgoing thus, she gave him first to wield
A weighty axe, with truest temper steel'd,
And double edg'd. Pope's Odyssey.

FORTHRIGHT. adv. [forth and right.] Strait forward; without flections.

He ever going so just with the horse, either forthright or turning, that it seem'd as he borrowed the horse's body, so he lent the horse his mind. Sidney.

The river not running forthright, but almost continually winding, as if the lower streams would return to their springs, or that the river had a delight to play with itself. Sidney.

Arrived there, they pass'd in forthright;
For still to all the gate stood open wide. Fairy Queen.

Here's a maze trod, indeed,
Through forthrights and meanders. Shakspeare, Tempest.

'Till forthright he rode to rouse the preys,
That shaded by the fern in harbour lay,
And thence dislodg'd. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

FORTHWITH. adv. [forth and with.] Immediately; without delay; at once; straight.

Forthwith he runs, with feigned faithful haste,
Unto his guest; who, after troublous fights
And dreams, 'gan now to take more sound repose. Spenser.

Few things are so refrained to any one end or purpose, that the same being extinct, they should forthwith utterly become frustrate. Huxley.

Neither did the martial men dally or prosecute the service faintly, but did forthwith quench that fire. Davies.

Forthwith began these fury-moving sounds,
The notes of wrath, the music brought from hell,
The rattling drums. Daniel's Civil War.

The winged heralds, by command
Of for reign pow'r, throughout the host proclaim
A solemn council forthwith to be held At Pandemonium. Milton's Paradise Lost.

In his passage thither one put into his hand a note of the whole conspiracy, desiring him to read it forthwith, and to remember the giver of it as long as he lived. South's Sermons.

FOURTEEN. n. f. [from forty.] The fourth teah; next after the thirty-ninth.

What doth it avail
To be the fortieth man in an evil? Donne.

Burnet says, Scotland is not above a fortieth part in value to the rest of Britain; and with respect to the profit that England gains from hence, not the forty thousandth part. Swi. t.

FORTIFIABLE. adj. [from fortify.] What may be fortified.

FORTIFICATION. n. f. [fortification, French; from fortify.]

1. The science of military architecture.

Fortification is an art shewing how to fortify a place with ramparts, parapets, moats, and other bulwarks; to the end that a small number of men within may be able to defend themselves, for a considerable time, against the assaults of a numerous army without; so that the enemy, in attacking them, must of necessity suffer great loss. It is either regular or irregular; and, with respect to time, may be distinguished into durable and temporary. Herriot.

The Phœnicians, tho' an unwartlike nation, yet understood the art of fortification. Notes on the Odyssey.

2. A place built for strength.
Excellent devices were used to make even their sports profitable; images, battles, and fortifications being then delivered to their memory, which, after stronger judgments, might dispense some advantage. Sidney.

FOURTEEN. n. f. [from fortify.]

1. One who erects works for defence.
The fortifier of .endennis made his advantage of the commodity afforded by the ground. Carver's Survey of Cornwall.

2. One who supports or secures; one who upholds.
He was led forth by many armed men, who often had been the fortifiers of wickedness, to the place of execution. Sidney.

FOUR. It Y. v. a. [fortis, French.]

1. To stren. then against attacks by walls or works.
Great Dunstan he strongly fortified. Shakspeare.

He fortified the city against besieging. Ecclus. l. 4.

2. To confirm; to encourage.
It greatly fortified her desires, to see that her mother had the like desires. Sidney.

3. To fix; to establish in resolution.
But in born worth that fortune can controul,
New-strun: and stiffest bent her sister tool:
The heroine assum'd the woman's place,
Confirm'd her mind, and fortified her face. Dryden.

A young man, before he leaves the shelter of his father's house, should be fortified with resolution to secure his virtues. Lacke.

FORTILAGE. n. f. [from fort.] A little fort; a blockhouse.

In all straight and narrow passages there should be some little fortilage, or wooden castle set, which should keep and command the straight. Spenser on Ireland.

FOURTEEN. n. f. [French.] A little fort raised to defend a camp, particularly in a siege. Hannay.

Thou hast talk'd
Of palisadoes, fortins, parapets. Shakspeare, Henry IV.

FORTITUDE. n. f. [fortitudo, Latin.]

1. Courage; bravery; magnanimity; greatness of mind; power of acting or suffering well.

I be king-becoming graces,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relieth of them. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

The better fortitude
Of patience, and heroic martyrdom Unfing. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Fortitude is the guard and support of the other virtues; and without courage, a man will scarce keep steady to his duty, and fill up the character of a truly worthy man. Lacke.

2. Strength; force. Not in use.

He wrongs his fame,
Despairing of his own arm's fortitude,
To join with witches and the help of hell! Shakspeare.

FOURTEEN. n. f. [from fort.] A little fort.

FOURTEEN. n. f. [contracted from fourteen nights, propercyne night, Saxon. It was the custom of the ancient northern nations to count time by nights: thus we say, this day sevennight. So Tacitus, Non diuturn numerus at nos, sed noctium computant.] The space of two weeks.

She would give her a lesson for walking so late, that should make her keep within doors for one fourtenight. Sidney.

Hanging in a deep well, somewhat above the water, for some fourtenight space, is an excellent means of making drink fresh and quick. Bacon's Natural History.

About a fourtenight before I had finished it, his majesty's declaration for liberty of conscience came abroad. Dryden.

He often had it in his head, but never, with much apprehension, 'till about a fourtenight before. Swift.

FOURTEEN. n. f. [fortis, French.] A strong hold; a fortified place; a castle of defence.

Breaking forth like a sudden tempest, he over-ran all, breaking down all the holds and fortresses. Spenser on Ireland.

The trumpet of death sounds in their hearing shrill; Their weapon, faith; their fortress was the grave. Fairfax.

God is our fortress, in whose conquering name

Let us resolve to scale their flinty bulwarks. Shakespeare.

'Tis here in no such way to give defence to absurd doctrines, as to guard them round about with legions of obscure and undefined words; which yet makes these retreats more like the dens of robbers, or holes of foxes, than the fortresses of fair warriors. Locke.

FORTUITOUS. adj. [fortuitus, French; fortuitus, Latin.] Accidental; casual; happening by chance.

A wonder then it must be, that there should be any man found so stupid as to persuade himself that this most beautiful world could be produced by the fortuitous concourse of atoms. Ray on the Creation.

If casual concourse did the world compose,

And things and acts fortuitous arose,

Then any thing might come from any thing;

For how from chance can constant order spring? Blackmore.

FORTUITOUSLY. adv. [fortuitus.] Accidentally; casually; by chance.

It is partly evaporated into air, and partly diluted into water, and fortuitously shared between all the elements. Reggi.

FORTUITOUSNESS. n.f. [from fortuitus.] Accident; chance; hit.

FORTUNATE. adj. [fortunatus, Latin.] Lucky; happy; successful; not subject to misfortune. Uf'd of persons or actions.

I am most fortunate thus accidentally to encounter you: you have ended my business, and I will merrily accompany you home. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

He sigh'd; and could not but their fate deplore,

So wretched now, for fortunate before. John Dryden.

No, there is a necessity in fate

Why still the brave bold man is fortunate:

He keeps his object ever full in sight,

And that assurance holds him firm and right:

True, 'tis a narrow path that leads to bliss,

But right before there is no precipice;

Fear makes men look aside, and so their footing mis. Dryden.

FORTUNATELY. adv. [from fortunate.] Happily; successfully.

Bright Eliza rul'd Britannia's state,

And boldly wifely, and fortunately great. Prior.

FORTUNATENESS. n.f. [from fortunate.] Happiness; good luck; success.

O me, said she, whose greatest fortunateness is more unfortunate than my sister's greatest unfortunateness. Sidney.

FORTUNE. n.f. [fortuna, Latin; fortuna, French.]

1. The power supposed to distribute the lots of life according to her own humour.

Fortune, that arrogant whore,

Ne'er turns the key to 't poor. Shakespeare. King Lear.

Though fortune's malice overthrow my state,

My mind exceeds the compass of her wheel. Shakespeare.

2. The good or ill that befalls man.

Rejoice, said he, to-day;

In you the fortune of Great Britain lies:

Among to brave a people you are they

Whom heav'n has chose to fight for such a prize. Dryden.

The adequate meaning of chance, as distinguished from fortune, in that the latter is understood to befall only rational agents, but chance to be among inanimate bodies. Bentley.

3. The chance of life; means of living.

His father dying, he was driven to London to seek his fortune. Swift.

4. Event; success good or bad.

This terrestrial globe has been surrounded by the fortune and boldness of many navigators. Temple.

No, he shall eat, and die with me, or live;

Our equal crimes shall equal fortune give. Dryden.

5. Estate; possessions.

If thou do't

As this instructs thee, thou do't make thy way

To noble fortunes. Shakespeare. King Lear.

That cyclops head of thine was first fram'd flesh

To raise my fortunes. Shakespeare. King Lear.

But tell me, Tityrus, what heav'nly power

Prefer'd your fortune in that fatal hour? Dryden.

The fate which governs poets, thought it fit

He should not raise his fortunes by his wit. Dryden.

He was younger son to a gentleman of a good birth, but small fortune. Swift.

6. The portion of a man or woman: generally of a woman.

I am thought some heirs rich in lands,

Fled to escape a cruel guardian's hands;

Which may produce a story worth the telling,

Of the next sparks that go a fortune seeking. Persius to Orpheus.

The fortune hunters have already cast their eyes upon her, and take care to plant themselves in her view. Spenser.

When mis's delights in her spinnet,

A fiddler may a fortune get. Swift.

7. Futurity; future events.

You who mens fortunes in their faces read,

To find out mine, look not, alas, on me:

But mark her face, and all the features heed;

For only there is writ my destiny. Conway's Mistle.

TO FORTUNE. v.n. [from the noun.] To befall; to fall out; to happen; to come casually to pass.

It fortun'd, as fair it then befall,

Behind his back, unwitting, where he flood,

Of ancient time there was a springing well,

From which fast trickled forth a silver flood. Fairy Queen.

It fortun'd the same night that a Christian, serving a Turk in the camp, secretly gave the watchmen warning that the Turks prepared the next day to give a general assault. Keats.

I'll tell you as we pass along,

That you will wonder what hath fortun'd. Shakespeare.

Here fortun'd Curl to slide. Pope's Dunciad.

FORTUNED. adj. Supplied by fortune.

Not th' imperious shew

Of the full fortun'd Caesar ever shall

Be brook'd with me. Shakespeare. Antony and Cleopatra.

FORTUNEBOOK. n.f. [fortune and book.] A book consulted to know fortune or future events.

Thou know'st 't a face, in whose each look

Beauty lays open love's fortun'd end;

On whose fair revolutions wait

Th' obsequious motions of love's fate. Coates.

FORTUNEHUNTER. n.f. [fortune and hunt.] A man whose employment is to enquire after women with great pains to enrich himself by marrying them.

We must, however, distinguish between fortune-hunters, and fortune-seekers. Johnson.

TO FORTUNTELL. v.n. [fortune and tell.]

1. To pretend to the power of revealing futurity.

We are simple men; we do not know what brought to pass under the profession of fortunetelling. Shakespeare.

I'll conjure you, I'll fortunetell you.

The gypsies were to divide the money got by fortunetelling, or by fortunetelling. Walter de la.

2. To reveal futurity.

Here, while his canting drone-pipe scan'd

The mystick figures of her hand,

He tipples palmistry, and dines

On all her fortunetelling lines. Comenius.

FORTUNETELLER. n.f. [fortune and teller.] One who is common people by pretending to the knowledge of futurity.

They brought one Pinch, a hungry lean-faced villain,

A thread-bare juggler, and a fortuneteller. Shakespeare.

A Welchman being at a festuous house, and seeing the posoners hold up hands at the bar, related to some of his acquaintance that the judges were good fortunetellers; for if they did but look upon their hand, they could certainly tell whether they should live or die. Bacon's Apophthegms.

Hast thou given credit to vain predictions of men, to dreams or fortunetellers, or gone about to know any secret by lot?

There needs no more than impudence on one side, and a superstitious credulity on the other, to the setting up of a fortuneteller. L'Estrange's Works.

Long ago a fortuneteller

Exactly said what now befall her. Swift.

FORTY. adj. [recapitely, Saxon.] Four times ten.

On fair ground I could beat forty of them. Shakespeare.

He that upon levity quits his station, in hopes to be wiser,

'tis forty to one loses. Johnson.

FORUM. n.f. [Latin.] Any public place.

The forum was a publick place in Rome, where lawyers and orators made their speeches before the proper judge in matters of property, or in criminal cases, to accuse or excuse, to complain or defend. Watt's Improvements of the Mind.

Close to the bay great Neptune's face adjoins,

And near a forum flank'd with marble fountains,

Where the bold youth, the num'rous fleets to flume,

Shape the broad fail, or smooth the taper oar. Pope.

TO FORWANDER. v.a. [for and wander.] To wander wildly and wearily.

The better part now of the ling'ring day

They travelled had, when as they far ely'd

A weary night forwandering by the way. Fairy Queen.

FORWARD. adv. [forwards, Saxon.] Towards; in a just or place before; onward; progressively.

When fervent sorrow flaked was,

She up arose, reliving him to find

Alive or dead, and forw'd forth doth pass. Fairy Queen.

From smaller things the mind of the hearers may go forward to the knowledge of greater, and climb up from the lower to the highest things. Bacon.

He that is used to go forward, and findeth a stop, followeth his own favour, and is not the thing he was. Forward.

FORWARD. adj. [from the adverb.]

1. Warm; earnest.

They would that we should remember the poor, which I also was forward to do. Gal. iii. 10.

2. Ardent; eager; hot; violent.

'Tis a perilous boy,
Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable;
He's all the mother's from the top to toe. Shakspeare.

5. Premature; early ripe.

Short summer lightly has a forward spring. Shakspeare.

6. Quick; ready; hasty.

The mind makes not that benefit it should of the information it receives from civil or natural historians, in being too forward or too slow in making observations on the particular facts recorded in them. Locke.

Had they who would persuade us that there are innate principles, considered separately the parts out of which these propositions are made, they would not perhaps have been too forward to believe they were innate. Locke.

7. Antecedent; anterior: opposed to posterior.

Let us take the infant by the forward top;
For we are old, and on our quick'st decrees
Th' inaudible and noiseless foot of time
Steals, ere we can effect them. Shakspeare.

8. Not behindhand; not inferior.

My good Camillo,
She is as forward of her breeding as
She is of th' rear of our birth. Shakspeare.

FORWARD. v. a. [from the adverb.]

1. To hasten; to quicken; to accelerate in growth or improvement.

As we house forth country plants, as lemons, to save them; so we may house our own country plants to forward them, and make them come in the cold seasons. Bacon.

Whenever I shine,
I forward the grass and I ripen the vine. Swift.

2. To patronise; to advance.

FORWARDER. n. f. [from forward.] He who promotes any thing.

FORWARDLY. adv. [from the adjective.] Eagerly; hastily; quickly.

The sudden and surprising turns we ourselves have felt, should not suffer us too forwardly to admit presumption. Atterbury.

FORWARDNESS. n. f. [from forward.]

1. Eagerness; ardour; readiness to act.

Absolutely we cannot discommend, we cannot absolutely approve either willingness to live, or forwardness to die. Hobbes.

It is so strange a matter to find a good thing furthered by ill men of a sinister intent and purpose, whose forwardness is not therefore a bribe to such as favour the same cause with a better and sincere meaning. Hobbes.

If the great ones were in forwardness, the people were in fury, entertaining this airy phantasm with incredible affection. Bacon.

2. Quickness; readiness.

He had such a dextrous proclivity, as his teachers were fain to retrain his forwardness; to the end that his brothers, who were under the same training, might hold pace with him. Warton.

3. Earliness; early ripeness.

4. Confidence; assurance; want of modesty.

In France it is usual to bring their children into company, and to cherish in them, from their infancy, a kind of forwardness and assurance. Adams.

FORWARDS. adv. Straight before; progressively.

The Rhodian ship passed through the whole Roman fleet, backwards and forwards several times, carrying intelligence to Drepanum. Arbuthnot.

FOSS. n. f. [fossa, Latin; foss, Welch.] A ditch; a moat; an intrenchment thrown up by the spade.

FOSET. See FAULET.

FOSSWAY. n. f. [foss and way.] One of the great Roman inroads through England, so called from the ditches on each side.

FOSSIL. adj. [fossilis, Latin; fossile, French.] That which is dug out of the earth.

The fossil shells are many of them of the same kinds with those that now appear upon the neighbouring shores; and the rest which as may be presumed to be at the bottom of the adjacent sea.

Fossil or rock salt, and sal gem, differ not in nature from each other; nor from the common salt of salt springs, or that of the sea, when pure. Woodward.

N. LVIII.

It is of a middle nature, between fossil and animal, being produced from animal excrements, intermixed with vegetable salts. Arbuthnot.

FOSSIL. n. f.

In this globe are many other bodies, which, because we discover them by digging into the bowels of the earth, are called by one common name fossils; under which are comprehended metals and minerals. Locke.

Many kinds of fossils are very oddly and elegantly shaped. Bentley.

By the word fossil, used as a denomination of one of three general divisions of natural productions, we understand bodies formed usually within the earth, sometimes on its surface, and sometimes in waters; of a plain and simple structure, in which there is no visible difference of parts, no distinction of vessels and their contents, but every portion of which is similar to and perfect as the whole. Hill.

FOSTER. v. a. [forstean, Saxon.]

1. To nurse; to feed; to support; to train up.

Thy threatening colour, now wud up,
And tame the savage spirit of wild war;
That, like a lion foster'd up at hand,
It may lie gently at the foot of peace. Shakspeare.

Somelay that ravens foster forlorn children.

Our kingdom's earth should not be fost'd. Shakspeare.

With that year blood, which it hath foster'd.

That bale wretch,
Bred on alms, and foster'd with cold dishes;
With scraps o' th' court. Shakspeare.

Fost'ring has always been a stronger alliance than blood. Davies.

No more let Ireland bear her harmless nation

Fosters no venom, since that Scots plantation. Chambers.

The son of Moleber,

Found in the fost, and foster'd in the plains, Dryden.

A shepherd and a king at once he reigns.

them: they are all of rank and ful feedings, and spoil the best provisions in cooking. Fenton.

8. Full of grofs humour; or bad matter; wanting purification or mundification.

You perceive the body of our kingdom,
How ful it is; what rank diseases grow,
And with what danger near the heart of it. Shakspeare.

9. Not bright; not serene.

Who's there besides ful weather?
One minded like the weather, most iniquely. Shakspeare.
Be fair or ful, or rain or shine,

The joys I have profess'd, in spite of fate are mine. Dryden.

10. With rough force; with unfeignable violence.

So in this throng bright Saccariffa far'd,
Oppress'd by those who strove to be her guard:

As ships, though never so obsequious, fall
Foul in a tempest on their admiral. Waller.

In his fallies their men might fall ful of each other. Clarend.

The great art of the devil, and the principal deceit of the heart, is to keep fair with God himself, while men fall ful upon his laws. Saith.

FOUNDATIO*N*. n. f. [fondation, French.]

1. The basis or lower parts of an edifice.

The flatness of houses, the goodness of trees, when we behold them, delighteth the eye; but that foundation which beareth up the one, that root which minisheth unto the other nourishment and life, is in the bosom of the earth concealed.

Hooker.

That is the way to make the city flat,

To bring the roof to the foundation,

To bury all.

Shakespeare.

O Jove, I think,

Foundations fly the wretched; such, I mean,

Where they should be reliev'd.

Shakespeare.

I draw a line along the shore;

I lay the deep foundations of a wall,

And Enos, nam'd from me, the city call.

Dryden.

Swift.

6. Establishment; settlement.

FOUNDER. n. f. [found.]

1. A builder; one who raises an edifice; one who presides at the erection of a city.

Of famous cities we the founders know;

But rivers, old as seas to which they go,

Are nature's bounty: 'tis of more renown

To make a river than to build a town.

Waller.

Not was Præcille's founder wanting there,

Whom fame reports the son of Mulciber;

Found in the fire, and foster'd in the plains;

A shepherd and a king at once he reigns.

Dryden.

2. One who establishes a revenue for any purpose.

The wanting orphans saw with wat'ry eyes

Their founders charity in the dust laid low.

Dryden.

Grew.

To FOUNDER. v. a. [fonder, French.] To cause such a forefence and tenderness in a horse's foot, that he is unable to set it to the ground.

Phœbus' steeds are founder'd,

Or night kept chain'd below.

Shakespeare.

I have foundered nine score and odd posts; and here, travel-tainted as I am, have, in my pure and immaculate valour, taken Sir John Coleville of the Dale, a most furious knight; but what of that? he saw me and yielded.

Shakespeare.

Thy stumbling founder'd jade can trot as high

As any other Pegasus can fly;

So the dull eel moves nimbler in the mud,

Than all the swift-finn'd racers of the flood.

Dorset.

Brutes find out where their talents lie:

A bear will not attempt to fly;

A founder'd horse will oft debate,

Before he tries a five-barr'd gate.

Swift.

If you find a gentleman fond of your horse, persuade your master to sell him, because he is vicious, and foundered into the bargain.

Swift.

Men of discretion, whom people in power may with little ceremony load as heavy as they please, drive them through the hardest and deepest roads, without danger of foundering or breaking their backs, and will be sure to find them neither resty nor vicious.

Swift.

FOUNDLING. n. f. [from found, of find.] A child exposed to chance; a child found without any parent or owner.

We, like bastards, are laid abroad, even as foundlings, to be trained up by grief and sorrow.

Sidney.

I pass the foundling by, a race unknown,

At doors expos'd, whom matrons make their own,

And into noble families advance

A nameless issue; the blind work of chance.

Dryden.

I shall mention a piece of charity which is practised by most of the nations about us: I mean a provision for foundlings, or for those children who, for want of such a provision, are exposed to the barbarity of cruel and unnatural parents.

Addison.

The goddess long had mark'd the child's distress,

And long had sought his sufferings to redress;

She prays the god, to take the foundling's part,

To teach his hands some beneficial art

Practis'd in freeths.

Gay.

And from the fount of life ambrosial drink.

Milton.

2. A small basin of springing water.

Proofs as clear as founts in July, when

We see each grain of gravel.

Shakespeare.

Can a man drink better from the fountain when it is finely paved with marble, than when it swells over the green turf?

Taylor.

Narcissus on the grassy verdure lies;

But whilst within the crystal fount he tries

To quench his heat, he feels new heat arise.

Addison.

3. A jet; a spout of water.

Fountains I intend to be of two natures: the one that sprinkles or spouts water; the other a fair receipt of water, without filth, or slime, or mud.

Bacon.

4. The head or first spring of a river.

All actions of your grace are of a piece, as waters keep the tenor of their fountains: your compassion is general, and has the same effect as well on enemies as friends.

Dryden.

5. Original; first principle; first cause.

Almighty God, the fountain of all goodness. Com. Prayer. You may reduce many thousand bodies to these few general figures, as unto their principal heads and fountains.

Parham.

This one city may well be reckoned not only the seat of trade and commerce, not only the fountain of habits and fashions, and good breeding, but of morally good or bad manners to all England.

Sparr.

FOUNTAINLESS. adj. [from fountain.] Without a fountain; without a spring.

And my reliance on his fractled dates
Has smit my credit. Shakspeare.

FRACTION. n. f. [fraction, French; fractio, Latin.]
1. The act of breaking; the state of being broken.

It hath been observed by several, that the surface of the earth hath been broke, and the parts of it dislocated; but more particularly several parcels of nature retain still the evident marks of fraction and ruin. Bacon.

2. A broken part of an integral.

Neither the motion of the moon, whereby months are computed, nor the sun, whereby years are reckoned, con-sisteth of whole numbers, but admits of fractions and broken parts. Bacon.

Pliny put a round number near the truth, rather than a fraction.

FRACTIONAL. adj. [from fraction.] Belonging to a broken number.

We make a cypher the medium between increasing and decreasing numbers, commonly called absolute or whole numbers, and negative or fractional numbers. Bacon.

That may do it without any great fracture of the stable and fixed parts of nature, or the infringement of the law thereof. Philosophy.

2. The separation of the continuity of a bone in living beings.
But thou wilt find grief destroy,
That to the broken bones may joy,
And tune together in a well-set song.
Full of his praises,
Who dead men raises;
Fractures well cur'd, make us more strong. Horace.

Fractures of the skull are dangerous, not in consequence of the injury done to the cranium itself, but as the brain becomes affected. Sharp.

TO FRACTURE. v. a. [from the noun.] To break a bone.

The leg was dislocated, and the fractured bones united together. Wifeman.

FRAGILE. adj. [fragile, French; fragilis, Latin.]

1. Brittle; easily snapped or broken.

To ease them of their griefs,

Their pangs of love, and other incident throes,

That nature's fragile vessel doth sustain

In life's uncertain voyage. Shakespeare.

The stalk of ivy is tough, and not fragile. Bacon.

'Tis weak and fragile, like Arachne's line. Danham.

A dry stick will be easily broken, when a green one will maintain a strong resistance; and yet in the moist substance there is less rest than in what is drier and more fragile. Glanv.

2. Weak; much ostentation, vain of fleshly arms,

And fragile arms, much instrument of war,

Long in preparing, soon to nothing brought,

Before mine eyes thou'lt sit. Milton.

FRAGILITY. n. f. [from fragile.]

1. Brittleness; easiness to be broken.

To make an induration with toughness, and less fragility, decad bodies in water for two or three days. Bacon.

chance of war, the violence of fortune. Knox.

3. Frailty; lability to fault.

All could not be right, in such a state, in this lower age of fragility. Watson.

FRAGMENT. n. f. [fragmentum, Latin.] A part broken from the whole; an imperfect piece.

He who late a sceptre did command,

Now grasps a floating fragment in his hand. Dryden.

Cowley, in his unfinished fragment of the Davidids, has shewn us this way to improvement. Watts.

If a thinned or plated body, which, being of an even thickness, appears all over of one uniform colour, should be slit into threads, or broken into fragments of the same thickness with the plate, I see no reason why every thread or fragment should not keep its colour. Newton.

FRAGMENTARY. adj. [from fragment.] Composed of fragments. A word not elegant, nor in use.

She, she is gone; he's gone: when thou know'lt this,

What fragmentary rubbish this world is,

Thou know'lt, and that it is not worth a thought;

He knows it too too much that thinks it nought. Darne.

FRAGOR. n. f. [Latin.] A noise; a crack; a crash.

Purs'd by hideous fragors, as before

The flames descend, they in their breaches roar. Sands.

FRAGRANCE. n. f. [fragrantia, Lat.] Sweetness of smell;

FRAGRANCY. n. f. [pleasing scent; grateful odour.

Eye separate he spies,

Veil'd in a cloud of fragrance, where she stood

Half-ly'd. Milton.

I am more pleas'd to survey my rows of coleworts and cabbages springing up in their full fragancy and verdure, than to see the tender plants of foreign countries kept alive by artificial heats. Addison.

Not lovelier seem'd Narcissus to the eye;

Nor, when a flower, could boast more fragrancy. Garth.

Such was the wine; to quench whose fervent steam

Scarce twenty measures from the living stream

To cool one cup suffic'd: the goblet crown'd,

Breath'd aromatick fragrancies around. Pope.

FRAGRANT. adj. [fragrans, Latin.] Odorous; sweet of smell.

The nymph vouchsaf'd to place

Upon her head the various wreath;

The flow'rs, less blooming than her face;

Their scent, less fragrant than her breath. Prior.

FRAGRANTLY. adv. [from fragrant.] With sweet scent.

As the hops begin to change colour, and smell fragrantly, you may conclude them ripe. Mortimer.

FRAIL. n. f.

1. A basket made of rushes.

2. A rush for weaving baskets.

FRAIL. adj. [fragilis, Latin.] Subject to casualties; easily destroyed.

I know my body's of so frail a kind,

As force without, fevers within can kill. Davies.

When with care we have rais'd this imaginary treasure of happinefs, we find, at last, that the materials of the structure are frail and perishing, and the foundation itself is laid in the sand. Rogers.

2. Weak of resolution; liable to error or seduction.

The truly virtuous do not easily credit evil that is told them of their neighbours; for if others may do amiss, then may

N° LIX.

these also speak amiss: man is frail, and prone to evil, and therefore may soon fall in words. Taylor.

FRAILNESS. n. f. [from frail.] Weakness; instability.

There is nothing among all the frailnesses and uncertainties of this sublunary world so tottering and unstable as the virtu-ty of a coward. Norris.

FRAILTY. n. f. [from frail.]

1. Weakness of resolution; inability of mind; infirmity.

Though Page be a secure fool, and stands so firmly on his wife's frailty, yet I cannot put off my opinion so easily. Shel.

Nor should'st thou have trusted that to woman's frailty:

Er I thee, thou thyself wilt cruel. Milnes.

God knows our frailty, thyself our weakness, and requires of us no more than we are able to do. Locke.

2. Fault proceeding from weakness; first of infirmity.

Love did his reason blind,

And love's the noblest frailty of the mind. Dryden.

Kind wits will those light faults excuse:

Those are the common frailties of the muse. Dryden.

Death, only death, can break the lasting chain;

And here, ev'n then, shall my cold dust remain;

Here all its frailties, all its flames resign.

And wait, 'till vis to sin to mix with thine. Pope.

FRAISCHEUR. n. f. [French.] Freshness; coolness. A word foolishly innovated by Dryden.

Hither in Summer-evenings you repair, knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord, if we do not frame our lives according to it. Tillotson.

5. To form to any rule or method by study or precept.

Thou art their soldier, and, when being bred in broils,

Hast not the soft way; but thou wilt frame

Thyself forsooth heretofore theirs. Shakespeare.

I have been a servant to the law;

I never yet could frame my will to it,

And therefore frame the law unto my will. Shakespeare.

6. To form and digest by thought.

The most abstruse ideas are only such as the understanding frames to itself, by joining together ideas that it had either from objects of sense, or from its own operations about them. Locke.

Full of that flame his tender scenes he warms,

And frames his goddess by your matchless charms. Grann.

Urge him with truth to frame his sure replies;

And sure he will; for wisdom never lies. Pope.

How many excellent reasonings are framed in the mind of a man of wisdom and study in a length of years? Watts.

7. To contrive; to plan.

Unpardonable the presumption and insolence in contriving and framing this letter was. Clarendon.

8. To settle; to scheme out.

Though I cannot make true wars,

I'll frame convenient peace. Shakespeare.

9. To invent; to fabricate, in a bad sense: as, to frame a story or lie.

ceit eccentricities and epicycles. Bacon.

FRAME. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A fabric; any thing constructed of various parts or members.

If the frame of the heavenly arch should dissolve itself, if celestial spheres should forget their wonted motions, and by irregular volubility turn themselves any way, as it might happen. Hooker.

Castles made of trees upon frames of timber, with turrets and arches, were anciently matters of magnificence. Bacon.

These are thy glorious works, parent of good!

Almighty! thinke this universal frame. Milton.

Divine Cecilia came,

Inventress of the vocal frame.

- The gate was adamant; eternal frame,
Which, hew'd by Mars himself, from Indian quarries came,
The labour of a god; and all along Tough iron plates were clench'd to make it strong. Dryden.
We see this vast frame of the world, and an innumerable multitude of creatures in it; all which we, who believe a God, attribute to him as the author. Tillotson.
2. Any thing made so as to inclose or admit something else.
Put both the tube and the vessel it leaned on into a convenient wooden frame, to keep them from mischances. Boyle.
His picture scarcely would deserve a frame. Dryden.
A globe of glass, about eight or ten inches in diameter, being put into a frame where it may be swiftly turned round its axis, will, in turning, shine, where it rubs against the palm of one's hand. Newton.
3. Order; regularity; adjusted series or disposition.
A woman, that is like a German clock,
Still a repairing, ever out of frame,
And never going aright. Shakespeare.
Your stedd fast preserves her frame;
In good and evil times the same. Suiff.
4. Scheme; order.
Another party did resolve to change the whole frame of the government in state as well as church. Clarendon.
5. Contrivance; projection.
John the Baptist, Shakespeare.
Whole spirits toil in frame of villanies.
6. Mechanical contrivance.

Whelp'd without form, until the dam
Has lick'd it into flame and frame. Hudibras.
- FRAMER. n. f. [from frame; framman, Saxon.] Maker;
former; contriver; skinner.
The forger of his own fate, the framer of his fortune, should be improper, if all his actions were predetermined. Hammond.

There was want of accurateness in experiments in the first original framer of those medals. Arbutnot.
FRAMPOLD. adj. [I his word is written by Dr. Hackett fram-ful. I know not its original.] Peevish; boisterous; rugged; crossgrained.
Her husband! Alas, the sweet woman leads an ill life with him: she leads a very frampful life with him. Shakespeare.
The frampful man could not be pacified. Hackett's Life of Williams.

- FRANCHISE. n. f. [franchise, French.]
1. Exemption from any onerous duty.
2. Privilege; immunity; right granted.
They granted them markets, and other franchises, and erected corporate towns among them. Darwin.
His gracious edict the same franchises yields
To all the wild increase of woods and fields. Dryden.
3. District; extent of jurisdiction.
There are other privileges granted unto most of the corporations, that they shall not be travelled forth of their own franchise. Spenser.
- To FRANCHISE. v. a. [from the noun.] To enfranchise; to make free; to keep free.
I lose no honour
In seeking to augment it; but still keep My bosom franchis'd, and allegiance clear. Shakespeare.

FRANKBLE. adj. [frangis, Latin.] Fragile; brittle; easily broken.
I thought it seem the foldest wood, if wrought before it be well seasoned, it will shew itself very frankble. Boyle.

FRANCON. n. f. [Of this word I know not the derivation.] A parainour; a boon companion.
Full, by her side did sit the bold Sanfloy,
Fit mate for such a musing minion,
Who in her looseness took exceeding joy,
Might not be found a franker francon. Spenser.

FRANK. adj. [franc, French.]
1. Liberal; generous; not niggardly.
The moultier sort of trees yield little mofs, which is for the reason of the frank putting up of the sap into the boughs. Bacon.

They were left destitute, either by narrow provision, or by their frank hearts and their open hands, and their charity towards others. Spratt.
'Tis the ordinary practice of the world to be frank of civilities that cost them nothing. L'Estrange.

FRANKALMOUSE. n. f. The fame which we in Latin call libera elem sine, or free alms in English; whence that tenure is commonly known among our English lawyers, by the name of a tenure in frank almoe, or frankalmoe, which, according to Britton, is a tenure by divine service. Asch.
FRANKINCENSE. n. f. [frank and incense; so called perhaps from its liberal distribution of odour.]
Frankincense is a dry resinous substance in pieces or lumps, of a pale yellowish white colour; a strong smell, but not disagreeable, and a bitter, acid, and resinous taste. It is a very inflammable. The earliest histories inform us, that frankincense was used among the sacred rites and sacrifices, as it still continues to be in many different parts of the world. As well however as the world has at all times been acquainted with the drug itself, we are still uncertain as to the place whence frankincense is brought, and much more so as to the tree which produces it. It is commended against disorders in the head and breast, and against diarrhoeas and dysenteries. Hist.
Take unto these sweet spices, with pure frankincense. Exod.
I find in Dioscorides record of frankincense grown in India. Bonard.

Black Ebony only will in India grow,
And odorous frankincense on the Sabazan bough. Dryden.
Cedar and frankincense, an odorous pine,
Flam'd on the hearth, and wide perfume'd the air. Pope.
FRANKLIN. n. f. [from frank.] A steward; a bailiff of land.
It signifies originally a little gentleman, and is not improperly englighted a gentleman fervant.

Both plain and pleasant to be walled in,
Where them does meet a franklin fair and free. Spenser.
FRANKLY. adv. [from frank.]
1. Liberally; freely; kindly; readily.

Oh, were it but my life,
I'd throw it down for your deliverance,
As frankly as a pin. Shakespeare.
If ever any malice in your heart
Were hid against me, now forgive me frankly. Shakespeare.
When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both. Luce.
By the toughness of the earth the sap cannot get up to spread so frankly as it should do. Bacon.

I value my garden more for being full of blackbirds than cherries, and very frankly give them fruit for their long toil.
2. Without constraint; without reserve.
The lords mounted their servants upon their own horses and they, with the volunteers, who frankly lifted themselves amounted to a body of two hundred and fifty horse. Clarendon.
He entered very frankly into those new delinquencies, which were contrived at court. Cowley.

FRANKNESS. n. f. [from frank.]
1. Plainness of speech; openness; ingenuitousness.
When the conde duke had some exaltation of his latest duke, in which he made all the protestations of his sincere affection, the other received his protestations with all contempt; and declared, with a very unnecessary frankness, that he would have no friendship with him. Cowley.

Tom made love to a woman of sense, and always treated her as such during the whole time of courtship: his natural temper and good breeding hindered him from doing any thing disagreeable, as his sincerity and frankness of behaviour made him converse with her before marriage in the same manner
he intended to do afterwards. Asch.

2. Liberality; bountylessness.
3. Freedom from reserve.
Upon occasion of the pictures present, he delivered with the frankness of a friend's tongue, as near as he could, word by word, what Kalendar had told him touching the charge story. Swift.

The ablest men that ever were, have had all an openness and frankness of dealing, and a name of certainty and veracity. Bacon.

FRAKPLE'DOE. n. f. [franciplegium, Latin, of franc, i. e. liber, & pleige, i. e. palei joffer.] A pledge or surety for free-men. For the ancient custom of England, for the preservation of the public peace, was that every freeborn man at fourteen years of age, religious persons, clerks, knights and their eldest sons excepted, should find security for his fidelity to the king, or else be kept in prison: whence it became customary for a certain number of neighbours to be bound for one another, to see each man of their pledge forthcoming at all times, or to answer the transgression of any one absenting himself. This was called frankpledge, and the circuit thereof was called decenna, because it commonly consisted of ten households; and every particular person, thus mutually bound, was called decenier. This custom was so strictly observed, that the sheriff, in every county, did from time to time take the oaths of young ones as they grew to the age of fourteen years, and see that they combined in one dozen or other: whereupon this branch of the sheriff's authority was called visus franciplegii, view of frankpledge. Covel.

The even mead, that erst brought sweetly forth
The freckled cowslip,
Wanting the scythe, all uncorrected, rank,
Conceives by idleness. Shakespeare

Now thy face charms ev'ry shepherd,
Spotted over like a leopard;
And, thy freckled neck display'd,
Envy breeds in ev'ry maid. Swift

FRECKLY. adj. [from freckle.] Full of freckles.

FRED. The same with peace; upon which our forefathers called their sanctuaries fredtols, i. e. the seats of peace. So Fredric is powerful, or wealthy in peace; Winfred, victorious peace; Reinfred, sincere peace. Gibson

FREE. adj. [Frisch, Saxon; vry, Dutch.]

1. At liberty; not a vassal; not enslaved; not a prisoner; not dependent.

Do faithful homage, and receive free honours,
All which we pine for now. Shakespeare
A free nation is that which has never been conquered, or thereby entered into any conditions of subjection. Temple

Free, what, and letter'd with so many chains? Dryden
How can we think any one freer than to have the power to do what he will? Locke

This wretched body trembles at your pow'r:
Thus far could fortune; but she can no more:
Free to herself my potent mind remains,
Nor fears the victor's rage, nor feels his chains. Prior
Set an unhappy pri's'ner free,
Who ne'er intended harm to thee. Prior

2. Uncompelled; unrestrained.
Their use of meats was not like unto our ceremonies, that being a matter of private action in common life, where every man was free to order that which himself did; but this is a publick constitution for the ordering of the church. Hooker

It was free, and in my choice whether or no I should publish these discourses; yet the publication being once resolved, the dedication was not so indifferent. South

3. Not bound by fate; not necessitated.
Freely they stood who stood, and fell who fell:
Not free, what proof could they have giv'n sincere
Of true allegiance, constant faith, or love,
Where only what they needs must do, appear'd;
Not what they would? Milton

4. Permitted; allowed.
Why, sir, I pray, are not the streets as free
For me as for you? Shakespeare
Defaming as impure what God declares
Pure; and commands to some, leaves free to all. Milton

5. Licentious; unrestrained.

O conspiracy!
Sham'st thou to frown thy dang'rous brow by night,
When evils are most free? Shakespeare
Physicians are too free upon the subject, in the conversation of their friends. Temple
The critics have been very free in their censures. Fulton
I know there are to whose presumptuous thoughts
Those free beauties, ev'n in them, seem faults. Pope

6. Open; ingenuous.

'Tis not to make me jealous;
To say my wife is fair, feeds well, loves company,
Is free of speech, sings, plays, and dances well;
Where virtue is, these make more virtuous. Shakespeare
Cassio, I have doubts within my heart;
Will you be free and candid to your friend? Owen

7. Acquainted; conversing without reserve.
Being one day very free at a great feast, he suddenly broke forth into a great laughter. Hallam

Free and familiar with misfortune grow,
Be us'd to sorrow, and inur'd to woe. Prior

8. Liberal; not parsimonious.
Glo'ster too, a foe to citizens,
O'ercharging your free purges with large fines,
That seeks to overthrow religion. Shakespeare

No statute in his favour says,
How free or frugal I shall pass my days;
I, who at sometimes spend as others spare. Pope Alexandrian verses, of twelve syllables, should never be allowed but when some remarkable beauty or propriety in them atones for the liberty: Mr. Dryden has been too free of them in his latter works. Pope

9. Frank; not gained by importunity; not purchased.
We wanted words to express our thanks: his anti-free offers left us nothing to ask. Law

10. Clear from distrust.
Who alone suffers, suffers most i' th' mind,
Leaving free things and happy shown behind. Shakespeare

11. Guileless; innocent.
Make mad the guilty, and appall the free,
Confound the ignorant. Shakespeare

My hands are guilty, but my heart is free. Dryden

12. Exempt.
These
Are such allow'd infirmities, that honesty
Is never free of. Shakespeare

Who fears not to do ill, yet fears the name;
And free from conscience, is a slave to fame. Dan
Let envy, then, those crimes within you set,
From which the happy never must be free. Dryden

Their steeds around,
Free from the harness, graze the flow'ry ground. Dryden
The will, free from the determination of each desire, is left to the pursuit of nearer satisfactions. Locke

13. Invested with franchises; possessing any thing without resistance; admitted to the privileges of any body.
He therefore makes all birds of every sort
Free of his farm, with promise to respect
There several kinds alike, and equally protect. Dryden

Friend!
What do'st thou make a ship-board? To what end
Art thou of Bethlem's noble college free?
Stark-staring mad, that thou shouldest tempt the sea! Dryden

14. Without expence; by charity, as a freewill.

TO FREE. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To set at liberty; to rescue from slavery or captivity; to manumit; to loose.

The child was prisoner to the womb, and is
By law and process of great nature thence Free'd and enfranchis'd; not a party to
The anger of the king, nor guilty of,
If any be, the trespass of the queen. Shakespeare
He recovered the temple, free'd the city, and spread the laws which were going down. Milton

Can'st thou no other master understand,
Than him that free'd thee by the pretor's wall? Dryden

Should thy coward tongue
Spread its cold poison through the martial throng,
My jav'lin shall revenge so base a part,
And free the soul that quivers in thy heart. Pope

2. To rid from; to clear from any thing ill.
It is no marvel, that he could think of no better way to be free'd of these inconveniencies the passions of those men-ings gave him, than to dissolve them. Carleton

Hercules
Free'd Erymanthus from the foaming boar. Dryden
Our land is from the rage of tigers free'd. Dryden

3. To clear from impediments or obstructions.
The chaste Sibylla shall your steps convey,
And blood of offer'd victims free the way. Dryden
Fierce was the fight; but half-slain to his prey,
By force the furious lover free'd his way. Dryden

4. To banish; to send away; to rid.
We may again
Give to our tables meat, sleep to our nights,
Free from our feasts and banquets bloody knives. Shakespeare

5. To exempt.
For he that is dead is free'd from sin. Ramus

6. To unlock; to open.
This master-key
Free every lock, and leads us to his person. Dryden

FREEBOTEER. n. f. [free and bouter.] A robber; a plunderer; a pillager.

The Kentishmen, perceiving that Perkin was not followed by any English of name, and that his forces consisted mostly of base people and freebooters, fitter to spoil a coast than to recover a kingdom, professed their loyalty to the king. Bacon.

The earl of Warwick had, as often as he met with any Irish frigates, or such freebooters as failed under their commission, taken all the seamen who became prisoners to them of that nation, and bound them back to back, and thrown them overboard into the sea. Clarendon.

FREEBOOTING. n. f. Robbery; plunder; the act of pillaging.

Under it he may cleanly convey any fit pillage, that cometh handomely in his way; and when he goeth abroad in the night on freebooting, it is his best and surest friend. Spenser.

FREEBORN. n. f. [free and born.] Not a slave; inheriting liberty.

O baseness, to support a tyrant's throne,
And crush your freemen brethren of the world! Dryden.
I shall speak my thoughts like a freeman subject, such things perhaps as no Dutch commentator could, and I am sure no Frenchman durst. Dryden.

Shall freemen men, in humble awe,
Submit to sivil shame;
Who from content and custom draw
The same right to be rul'd by law,

Which kings pretend to reign? Dryden.

FREECHAPPEL. n. f. [free and chappel.] Such chappels as are of the king's foundation, and by him exempted from the jurisdiction of the ordinary. The king may also license a subject to found such a chappel, and by his charter exempt it from the ordinary's visitation. Cowell.

FREECOST. n. f. [free and cost.] Without expence; free from charges.

We must not vouch any man for an exact master in the rules of our modern policy, but such a one as has brought him so far to hate and despise the absurdity of being kind upon freemen, as not so much as to tell a friend what it is o'clock for nothing. South's Sermons.

FREEDMAN. n. f. [freed and man.] A slave manumitted. Libertus.

The freedman jollies, and will be preferred;
First come, first serv'd, he cries. Dryden.

FREEDOM. n. f. [from free.]

1. Liberty; exemption from servitude; independence.

The laws themselves they do specially rage at, as most repugnant to their liberty and natural freedom. Spenser.

O freedom! first delight of human kind!
Not that which bondmen from their masters find,
The privilege of doles; nor yet t' inscribe
Their names in this or t' other Roman tribe;
That sale's enfranchisement with ease is found;
Slaves are made citizens by turning round. Dryden.

2. Privileges; franchises; immunities.

By our holy Sabbath have I sworn
To have the due and forfeit of my bond;
If you deny it, let the danger light
Upon your charter, and your city's freedom. Shakspeare.

3. Power of enjoying franchises.

This prince first gave freedom to servants, so as to become citizens of equal privileges with the rest, which very much increased the power of the people. Swift.

4. Exemption from fate, necessity, or predetermination.

I else must change
Their nature, and revoke the high decree
Unchangeable, eternal, which ordain'd
Their freedom; they themselves ordain'd their fall. Milton.

In every sin, by how much the more free will is in its choice, by so much is the act the more sinful; and where there is nothing to importune, urge, or provoke the will to any act, there is so much an higher and perfecter degree of freedom about that act. South.

5. Unrestrained.

I will that all the fasts and sabbaths shall be all days of immunity and freedom for the Jews in my realm. 1 Mac.

6. The state of being without any particular evil or inconvenience.

7. Ease or facility in doing or showing any thing.

FREEQUOTED. adj. [free and quot.] Not restrained in the march.

We will fetters put upon this fear,
Which now goes too freely. Shakspeare.

FREHEARTED. adj. [free and heart.] Liberal; unrestrained.

Love must frehearted be, and voluntary;
And not incanted, or by fate constrain'd. Davies.

FREHOLD. n. f. [free and hold.] That land or tenement which a man holdeth in fee, fee-tail, or for term of life.

Freehold in deed is the real possession of lands or tenements in fee, fee-tail, or for life. Freehold in law is the right that a man has to such land or tenements before his entry or seizure. Freehold is sometimes taken in opposition to villenage. Land, in the time of the Saxons, was called either bockland, that is, holden by book or writing, or folcland, that is, holden without writing. The former was held by far better conditions, and by the better sort of tenants, a noblemen and gentlemen, being such as we now call freehold. The latter was commonly in the possession of clowns, being that which we now call at the will of the lord. Cowell.

No alienation of lands holden in chief should be available, touching the freehold or inheritance thereof, but only where it were made by matter of record, to be found in some of her majesty's treasuries. Bacon.

There is an unspeakable pleasure in calling any thing one's own: a freehold, though it be but in ice and snow, will make the owner pleased in the possession, and stout in the defence of it. Adison's Freeholder.

My friends here are very few, and fixed to the freehold, from whence nothing but death will remove them. Swift.

I should be glad to possess a freehold that could not be taken from me by any law to which I did not give my own consent. Swift to Lord Mordaunt.

FREHOLDEN. n. f. [from freehold.] One who has a freehold.

As extortion did banish the old English freeholder, who could not live but under the law; so the law did banish the Irish lord, who could not live but by extortion. Davies.

FREE'LY. adv. [from free.]

1. At liberty; without vassalage; without slavery; without dependence.

2. Without restraint; lavishly.

If my son were my husband, I would free'ly rejoice in that absence where he won honour, than in the embraces of his bed, where he would shew most love. Shakspeare.

I pledge your grace; and if you knew what pains I have bestow'd to breed this present peace, You would drink free'ly. Shakspeare.

3. Without scruple; without reserve.

Let such teach others who themselves excel,
And censure free'ly who have written well. Pope.

4. To follow rather the Goths in rhyming than the Greeks in true verifying, were even to eat acorns with swine, when we may free'ly eat wheat-bread among men. Ascham.

The path to peace is virtue: what I show,
Thyself may free'ly on thyself bestow:
Fortune was never worship'd by the wife;
But, set aloft by fools, usurps the skies. Dryden.

5. Without necessity; without predetermination.

Free'ly they flood who flood, and fell who fell. Milton.
He leaves us to chafe with the liberty of reasonable beings; they who comply with his grace, comply with it free'ly; and they who reject it, do also free'ly reject it. Rogers.

6. Frankly; liberally.

By nature all things have an equally common use: nature free'ly and indifferently opens the bosom of the universe to all mankind. South's Sermons.

7. Spontaneously; of its own accord.

FREEMAN. n. f. [free and man.]

1. One not a slave; not a vassal.

Had you rather Cæsar were living, and die all slaves, than that Cæsar were dead, to live all freemen? Shakspeare.

If to break loose from the conduct of reason, and to want that restraint of examination and judgment which keeps us from chusing or doing the worse, be liberty, true liberty, mad men and fools are only the freemen. Lact.

2. One partaking of rights, privileges, or immunities.

He made us freemen of the continent,
Whom nature did like captives treat before. Dryden.

What this union was is expressed in the preceding verse, by their both having been made freemen on the same day. Adison's Remarks on Italy.

FREEMINDED. adj. [free and mind.] Unconstrained; without load of care.

To be freeminded, and cheerfully disposed at hours of meat, sleep, and exercise, is one of the best precepts of long lasting. Bacon's Essays.

FREENESS. n. f. [from free.]

1. The state or quality of being free.

2. Openness; unreservedness; ingenuoufness; candour.

The reader may pardon it, if he please, for the freeness of the confession. Dryden.

3. Generosity; liberality.

I hope it will never be said that the laity, who by the clergy are taught to be charitable, shall in their corporations exceed the clergy itself, and their sons, in freeness of giving. Sparr.

FREESCHOOL. n. f. [free and school.] A school in which learning is given without pay.

To give a civil education to the youth of this land in the time to come, provision was made by another law, that there should be one freeship at least erected in every diocese. Dowd.

Two clergymen stood candidates for a small freeship in ————, where a gentleman of interest in the country, who happened to have a better understanding than his neighbours, procured the place for him who was the better scholar. Swift.

FREESPO'KEN. adj. [free and spoken.] Accustomed to speak without reserve.

Nerva one night supped privately with some six or seven; amongst whom there was one that was a dangerous man, and began to take the like courses as Marcellus and Regulus had done: the emperor fell into discourse of the injustice and tyranny of the former time, and, by name, of the two accusers; and said, what should we do with them, if we had them now? One of them that was at supper, and was a freeship senator, said, Marry, they should sup with us. Bacon.

FREE-TONE. n. f. [free and stone.] Stone commonly used in building.

Freeze is so named from its being of such a constitution as to be wrought and cut freely in any direction. Woodward.
I saw her hand: she has a leathern hand, a free-stone coloured hand. Shakspere.

The streets are generally paved with brick or freestone, and always kept very neat. Addison.
FREEW'KKER. n. f. [free and think.] A libertine; a con-temner of religion.

Atheist is an old-fashion'd word: I'm a freethinker, child. Addison's Drummer.

Of what use is freedom of thought, if it will not produce freedom of action, which is the sole end, how remote soever in appearance, of all objections against Christianity? And therefore the freethinkers consider it as an edifice, wherein all the parts have such a mutual dependance on each other, that if you pull out one single nail, the whole fabric must fall to the ground. Swift.

FREEWILL. n. f. [free and will.]

1. The power of directing our own actions without constraint by necessity or fate.

We have a power to suspend the prosecution of this or that desire: this seems to me the source of all liberty; in this seems to consist that which is improperly called freewill. Locke.

2. Voluntaryness; spontaneity.
I make a decree, that all they of the people of Israel in my realm, which are minded of their own freewill to go up to Jerusalem, go with thee. Ezra.

FREEWOMAN. n. f. [free and woman.] A woman not enslaved.

All her ornaments are taken away of a freewoman; she is become a bondslave. Malac.

TO FREEZE. v. n. pr. freeze. [vrizen, Dutch.]

1. To be congealed with cold.

The aqueous humour of the eye will not freeze, which is very admirable, seeing it hath the perspicuity and fluidity of common water. Key.

The freezing of water, or the blowing of a plant, returning at equidistant periods in all parts of the earth, would as well serve men to reckon their years by as the motions of the sun. Locke.

2. To be of that degree of cold by which water is congealed.

Orpheus with his lute made trees
And mountain tops, that freeze,
Bow themselves what he did sing. Shaksp.

Thou art all ice, thy kindness freezes. Shaksp.

Heav'n freezes above severe, the clouds conceal,
And thro' the crystal vault appear'd the standing hail. Dryd.

TO FREEZE. v. a. pr. freeze; part. frozen or froze.

1. To congeal with cold.

2. To kill by cold.

When we both lay in the field,
Frozen almost to death, how did he lap me,
E'en in his garments! Shaksp.

My matter and miscell are almost frozen to death. Shak.

3. To chill by the loss of power or motion.

I have a faint cold fear thrills through my veins,
That almost freezes up the heat of life. Shaksp.

Death came on a main,
And exercis'd below his iron reign;
Then upward to the feat of life he goes;
Sense fled before him, what he touch'd he froze. Dryd.

TO FREIGHT. v. a. pr. freighted; part. freighted; which being now used as an adjective, freighted is adopted. [freter, French.]

1. To load a ship or vessel of carriage with goods for transportation.

The princes
Have to the port of Athens sent their ships,
Freight with the ministers and instruments
Of cruel war. Shakspere.
Nor is, indeed, that man less mad than these,
Who freights a ship to venture on the seas;

With one frail interposing plank to save
From certain death, roll'd on by every wave.

Freighted with iron, from my native land
I flee my voyage. Dryd.

2. To load as the burthen; to be the thing with which a vessel is freighted. Fre.

I would
Have sunk the sea within the earth, or ere
It should the good ship to her swallow'd, and I he freighting souls within her. Shaksp.

FREIGHT. n. f.

1. Any thing with which a ship is loaded.

He clears the deck, receives the mighty freights;
The leaky vessel groans beneath the weight. Dryd.

2. The money due for transportation of goods.

FREIGHTIER. n. f. [freteur, French.] He who freights a vessel. Fre.

FREN. n. f. A worthless woman. An old word widely forgotten.

But now from me his mad ring mind is flur'd,
And woos the widow's daughter of the gl'm;
And now fair Rosalind hath bred his fancy,
So now his friend is changed for a fren. Spens.

FRENCH CLAY. n. f.

French Clay is an indurate clay, extremely dense, of a smooth glossy surface, and soft and unctuous to the touch; of a greyish white colour, variegated with a dusky green.

French Clay is unctuous to the touch, as asbestos is, but harder, and nearer approaching the confidence of stone. Wood.

TO FRE'CHIFY. v. a. [from French.] To imitate with the manner of France; to make a comcomb.

They mistook nothing more in king Edward the Confessor than that he was Frenchified; and accounted the desire of foreign language then to be a foretoken of baseness in foreign powers, which indeed happened.

Has he familiarly dillick'd
Your yellow starch, or said your doubtlet
Was not exactly Frenchified. Field.

FRENETICK. adj. [frénétique, French; Genetivus; Genetivus therefore written frénétique.] Mad; deliriated.

He himself impotent,
By means of his frénétique malady. Dand.

FRENZY. n. f. [Genetivus; phrenitis, Latin; whence phrenetic, phrenetic, phreny, or fenzy.] Madness; distraction of mind; alienation of understanding; any violent passion approaching to madness.

That knave, Ford, hath the finest mad devil of fenzy in him that ever governed fenzy. Shaksp.

True fortune is seen in great exploits,
That justice warrants, and that wisdom guides;
All else is touring fenzy and distraction. Addison.

Why such a disposition of the body induces sleep, and disturbs all the operations of the soul, and occasions delirium or fenzy: this knowledge exceeds our narrow faculties. Bos.

FREQUENCY. n. f. [frequent, fr frequentia, Latin.] Crowds; concourse; assembly.

I he frequent of degree,
From high to low throughout. Shaksp.

He, in full frequent bright
Of angels, thus to Gabriel smiling spake. Par.

FREQUENT. n. f. [frequentia, Latin.]

1. Common occurrence; the condition of being often met or done.

Should a miracle be indulged to one, others will think themselves equally intitled to it; and if indulged to many, it would no longer have the effect of a miracle; as soon as influence would be lost by the frequency of it. Locke.

2. Concourse; full assembly.

Thou can't e're while into this senate: who
Of such a frequency, to many friends
And kindred thou hast here, saluted thee? En. 7.

FREQUENT. adj. [frequent, French; frequent, Latin.]

1. Often done; often seen; often occurring.

The streets are fill'd with frequent funerals.
Frequent heres shall besiege your gates. Dand.

2. Used often to practice any thing.

Every man thinks he may pretend to any employment, provided he has been loud and frequent in declaring himself fit for the government. Locke.

3. Full of concourse.

Frequent and full. Malac.

TO FREQUENT. v. a. [frequent, Latin; frequent, French.]

To visit often; to be much in any place; to resort often to it.

Later day,
Finding in it ports for hithers trade,
'Gan more the same frequent, and further to invade. Field.

There were synagogues for men to resort unto: our saviour himself, and after him the apostles, frequent them. Malac.

This fellow here, this thy creature,
By night frequent my house. Shaksp.

At that time this land was known and frequented by the ships and vessels.

With tears

Wat'ring the ground, and with our sighs the air

Frequenting, sent from hearts contrite, in sign

Of sorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek.

To serve my friends, the senate I frequent;

And there what I before digested, vent.

That he frequented the court of Augustus, and was well received in it, is most undoubted.

FREQUENTABLE. adj. [from frequent.] Conversable; accessible. A word not now used, but not elegant.

While youth lasted in him, the exercises of that age and his humour, not yet fully discovered, made him somewhat the more frequentable and less dangerous.

FREQUENTATIVE. adj. [frequentatif, French; frequentativus, Latin.] A grammatical term applied to verbs signifying the frequent repetition of an action.

FREQUENTER. n. f. [from frequent.] One who often resorts to any place.

Persons under bad imputations are no great frequenters of churches.

FREQUENTLY. adv. [frequenter, Latin.] Often; commonly; not rarely; not seldom; a considerable number of times; manifold times.

I could not, without much grief, observe how frequently both gentlemen and ladies are at a loss for questions and answers.

FRESCO. n. f. [Italian.]

1. Coolness; shade; duskiness, like that of the evening or morning.

Hellish frites

Love more the frites of the nights.

2. A picture not drawn in glaring light, but in dusk.

Here thy well-study'd marbles fix our eye;

A fading fresco here demands a sigh.

FRESH. adj. [fresche, Saxon; fraiche, French.]

1. Cool; not vapid with heat.

I'll cull the fairs, I'll mead for thy repast;

The choicest herbs I to thy board will bring,

And draw thy water from the freshest spring.

2. Not salt.

They keep themselves unmixt with the salt water; so that, a very great way within the sea, men may take up as fresh water as if they were near the land.

3. New; not impaired by time.

This second source of men, while yet but few,

And while the dread of judgment past remain

Fresh in their minds, fearing the Deity,

With some regard to what's just and right,

Shall lead their lives.

That love which first was set, will first decay;

Muse of a fresher date will longer stay.

4. In a state like that of recentness.

We will revive those times, and in our memories

Preserve and still keep fresh, like flowers in water.

With such a care

As roses from their stalks we tear,

When we would still preserve them new,

And fresh as on the bush they grew.

Thou sun, said I, fair light!

And thou enlighten'd earth, so fresh and gay!

5. Recent; newly come.

Amidst the spirits Palinurus fresh'd;

Yet fresh from life, a new admitted guest,

Fresh from the fact, as in the present case,

The criminals are seiz'd upon the place;

Stiff in denial, as the law appoints,

On engines they dissent their tortur'd joints.

6. Repaired from any loss or diminution.

Nor lies she long; but, as her fates ordain,

Springs up to life, and fresh to second pain:

Is laid to-day, to-morrow to be slain.

7. Florid; vigorous; cheerful; unfaired; unimpaired.

This pipe is decrepid, and the bell goeth for him: take order that when he is dead there be chosen a pipe of fresh years, between fifty and threescore.

Two swains,

Fresh as the morn, and as the season fair.

8. Healthy in countenance; ruddy.

Tell me,

Hast thou beheld a fresher gendewoman,

Such war of a white and red within her cheeks?

It is no rare observation in England to see a fresh coloured lusty young man yoked to a consumptive female, and him foot after attending her to the grave.

I they repent to themselves a thousand poor, tall, innocent, fresh coloured young gentlemen.

9. Brisk; strong; vigorous.

As a fresh gale of wind fills the sails of a ship.

10. Falling; opposed to eating or drinking. A low word.

11. Sweet: opposed to stale or stinking.

FRESH. n. f. Water not salt.

He shall drink nought but brine; for I'll not shew him

Where the quick fishes are.

To FRESHEN. v. n. [from fresh.] To make fresh.

Prelusive drops let all their moisture flow

In large effusion o'er the freshen'd world.

To FRESHEN. v. n. To grow fresh.

A fresh'ning breeze the magic power supply'd,

While the wing'd vessel flew along the tide.

FRESHET. n. f. [from fresh.] A pool of fresh water.

All fish from sea or shore,

Fresh or purling brook, or still or fin.

FRESHLY. adv. [from fresh]

1. Coolly.

2. Newly; in the former state renewed.

The weeds of hereby be ng grown unto such ripeness as that was, do, even in the very cutting down, scatter oftentimes those seeds which for a while lie unseen and buried in the earth;

but afterwards fresh spring up again, no less pernicious than at the first.

Then shall our names,

Familiar in their mouth as household words,

Be in their flowing cups fresh remember'd.

They are now freshly in difference with them.

3. With a healthy look; ruddily.

Looks he as fresh as he did the day he wrestled?

FRESHNESS. n. f. [from fresh.]

1. Newness; vigour; spirit; the contrary to vapidity.

Most odours smell best broken or crushed; but flowers pressed or beaten, do lose the freshness and sweetness of their odour.

2. Freedom from diminution by time; not staleness.

For the constant freshness of it, it is such a pleasure as can never cloy or overwork the mind; for surely no man was ever weary of thinking that he had done well or virtuously.

3. Freedom from fatigue; newness of strength.

The Scots had the advantage both for number and freshness of men.

4. Coolness.

There are some rooms in Italy and Spain for freshness, and gathering the winds and air in the heats of Summer; but they be but pennings of the winds, and enlarging them again, and making them reverberate in circles

Say, if the plebe, the hither may repair,

And breathe the freshness of the open air.

She laid her down to rest,

And to the winds expos'd her glowing breast,

To take the freshness of the morning air.

5. Ruddiness; colour of health.

The secret venom, circling in her veins,

Works through her skin, and bursts in bloating flames;

Her cheeks their freshness lose and wouled grace,

And an unusual paleness spreads her face.

6. Freedom from saltness.

FRESHWATER. [A compound word of fresh and water, used as an adjective.] Raw; unskilled; unacquainted. A low term borrowed from the sailors, who stigmatize those who come first to sea as freshwater men or novices.

The nobility, as freshwater soldiers which had never seen but some light skirmish, in their vain bravery made light account of the Turks.

FRET. n. f. [Of this word the etymology is very doubtful:

some derive it from fretan, to eat; others from fretan, to adorn: some from fretto; Skinner more probably from fretto, or the French fretiller: perhaps it comes immediately from the Latin fretum.]

1. A frith, or strait of the sea, where the water by confinement is always rough.

Euripus generally signifieth any strait, fret, or channel of the sea, running between two shores.

2. Any agitation of liquors by fermentation, confinement, or other cause.

The channel of this river is white with rocks, and the surface covered with froth and bubbles; for it runs along upon the fret, and is still breaking against the stones that oppose its passage.

The blood in a fever, if well governed, like wine upon the fret, discharge itself of all heterogeneous mixtures.

3. That stop of the musical instrument which causes or regulates the vibrations of the string.

It requir'd good winding of a string before it will make any note; and in the tops of lutes, &c. the higher they go, the the less distance is between the frets.

The harp

Had work, and rested not: the solemn pipe

And dulcimer, all organs of sweet stop,

All sounds on fret by string or golden wire,

Temper'd soft tunings, intermix'd with voice

Choral or unison.

They are fitted to answer the most variable harmony: two wax, which will convert the needle almost as actively as the loadstone. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FRICTION. n. f. [frictio, Fr. fric, from fri, Latin.] The act of rubbing two bodies together.

Do not all bodies which abound with terrestrial parts, and especially with sulphureous ones, emit light as often as those parts are sufficiently agitated, whether the agitation be made by heat, friction, percussion, putrefaction, or by any vital motion? Newton.

2. The resistance of machines caused by the motion of one body upon another.

3. Medical rubbing with the fleshbrush or cloths.

Frictions make the parts more fleshy and full, as we see both in men and in the currying of horses: so that they draw a greater quantity of spirits to the parts. Bacon.

FRI'DAY. n. f. [frige dæg, Saxon.] The sixth day of the week, so named of Freya, a Saxon deity.

An' she were not kin to me, she would be as fair on Friday as Helen is on Sunday. Shakespeare.

For Venus, like her day, will change her cheer, And seldom shall we see a Friday clear. Dryden.

FRIEND. n. f. [friend, Dutch; freond, Saxon.] This word, with its derivatives, is pronounced friend, friendly: the i totally neglected.]

1. One joined to another in mutual benevolence and intimacy: opposed to foe or enemy.

Friends of my soul, you twain Rule in this realm, and the god's state sustain. Shakespeare.

Some man is a friend for his own occasion, and will not abide in the day of thy trouble. Ecclus.

God's benison go with you, and with those That would make good of bad and friends of foes. Shak.

Wonder not to find this foul extend The bounds, and seek some other self, a friend. Dryden.

2. One without hostile intentions.

Who comes to fast in silence of the night? —A friend. Shakespeare.

3. One reconciled to another: this is put by the custom of the language somewhat irregularly in the plural number.

He's friends with Cæsar, In state of health thou say'st, and thou say'st free. Shakespeare.

My son came then into my mind; and yet my mind Was then scarce friends with him. Shakespeare.

4. An attendant, or companion.

The king ordains their entrance, and ascends His regal feat, surrounded by his friends. Dryden.

5. Favourer; one propitious.

Aurora riding upon Pegasus, sheweth her swiftness, and how she is a friend to poetry and all ingenious inventions. Peascham.

6. A familiar compellation.

Friend, how cam'st thou in hither? What supports me, do'st thou ask? Matthew.

The confidence, friend, I have lost mine eyes o'erply'd In liberty's defence. Milton.

To FRIEND, v. a. [from the noun.] To favour; to befriend; to countenance; to support.

I know that we shall have him well to friend. Shakespeare.

N° LIX.

Let the Naisau-star in rising majesty appear, And guide the prosperous mariner With everlasting beams of friendly light. Prior.

2. Disposed to union.

Like friendly colours found our hearts unite, And each from each contract new strength and light. Pope.

3. Salutary; homogeneal.

Not that Nepentes, which the wife of Thome In Egypt gave to Jove-born Helena, Is of such power to stir up joy as this, To life so friendly, or so cool to thirt. Milton.

FRIENDLY. adv. In the manner of friends; with appearance of kindness.

Here between the armies, Let's drink together friendly, and embrace; That all their eyes may bear those tokens home Of our restored love and amity. Shakespeare.

FRIENDSHIP. n. f. [friendship, Dutch.]

1. The state of minds united by mutual benevolence.

There is little friendship in the world, and least of all between equals, which was wont to be magnified: that that is, is between superior and inferior, whose fortunes may comprehend the one the other. Bacon.

He lived rather in a fair intelligence than any friendship with the favourites. Clarendon.

My sons, let your unseemly discord cease, If not in friendship, live at least in peace. Dryden.

2. Highest degree of intimacy.

His friendships, still to few confin'd, Were always of the middling kind. Swift.

3. Favour; personal kindness.

Raw captains are usually sent, only preferred by friendship, and not chosen by sufficiency. Spenser.

4. Assistance; help.

Gracious, my lord, hard-by here is a hovel: Some friendship will it lend you 'gainst the tempest; Repose you there. Shakespeare.

5. Conformity; affinity; correspondence; aptness to unite.

We know those colours which have a friendship with each other, and those which are incompatible, in mixing together those colours of which we would make trial. Dryden.

FRIEZE. n. f. [drap de frieze, French.] A coarse warm cloth, made perhaps first in Friesland.

If all the world Should in a fit of temperance feed on pulse, Drink the clear stream, and nothing wear but frieze, The All-giver would be unthank'd. Milton.

The captive Germans, of gigantic size, Are rank'd in order, and are clad in frieze. Dryden.

He could no more live without his frieze coat than without his skin. Addison.

See how the double nation lies, Like a rich coat with skirts of frieze; As if a man in making poetries, Should bundle thistles up with roses. Swift.

FRIEZE. n. f. [In architecture.] A large flat member which separates the architrave from the cornice; of which there are as many kinds as there are orders of columns. Harris.

No jutting frieze, Buttrice, nor coigne of 'vantage, but this bird Hath made his pendant-bed, and procreant cradle. Shak.

Nor did there want Cornice or frieze with bossy sculptures grav'n; The roof was fretted gold. Milton.

Polydore designed admirably well, as to the practical part, having a particular genius for frieze. Dryden.

FRIEZED. adj. [from frieze.] Shagged or napped with frieze.

FRIEZELIKE. adj. [frieze and like.] Resembling a frieze.

I have seen the figure of Thalia, the comick muse, sometimes with an entire headpiece and a little frieze-like tower, running round the edges of the face, and sometimes with a mask for the face only. Addison.

FRIGAT. n. f. [frigat, French; frigate, Italian.]

1. A small ship. Ships under fifty guns are generally termed frigats.

The herds Were strongly clam'rous in the frighted fields. Shakespeare.

Nor exile or danger can fright a brave spirit, With innocence guarded, With virtue rewarded, I make of my sufferings a merit. Dryden.

9 U

The mind *fright*s itself with any thing reflected on in gross, and at a distance: things thus offered to the mind, carry the shew of nothing but difficulty. Locke.

Whence glancing off with many a broaden'd orb,
He *fright*s the nations. Thomson.

FRIGHT. n. f. [from the verb.] A sudden terror.

You, if your goodness does not plead my cause,
May think I broke all hospitable laws,
To bear you from your palace-yard by might,
And put your noble person in a fright. Dryden.

TO FRIGHTEN. v. a. To terrify; to shock with dread.

The rugged bear's or spotted lynx's brood,
Frighten the valleys and infect the wood. Prior.

Then to her glass; and Betty, pray,
Don't I look frightfully to-day? Swift.

FRIGHTFULNESS. n. f. [from frightful.] The power of impressing terror.

FRIGID. adj. [frigidus, Latin.]

1. Cold; without warmth. In this sense it is seldom used but in science.

In the torrid zone the heat would have been intolerable, and in the frigid zones the cold would have destroyed both animals and vegetables. Chryse.

2. Without warmth of affection.

3. Impotent; without warmth of body.

4. Dull; without fire or fancy.

If justice Philip's cottage head
Some frigid rhymes disbursts,

They shall like Persian tales be read,
And glad both babes and nurses. Swift.

FRIGIDITY. n. f. [frigiditas, Latin.]

1. Coldness; want of warmth.

2. Dulness; want of intellectual fire.

Driving at these as at the highest elegancies, which are but the frigidities of wit. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Of the two extremes, one would sooner pardon phrenzy than frigidity. Pope.

3. Want of corporal warmth.

The boiling blood of youth agitating the fluid air, hinders that serenity which is necessary to so severe an intemperance;
and the frigidity of decrepit age is as much its enemy, by reason of its dulling moisture. Glanville.

4. Coldness of affection.

FRIGIDLY. adv. [from frigid.] Coldly; dully; without affection.

FRIGIDNESS. n. f. [from frigid.] Coldness; dulness; want mental appendages added to dress or furniture.

Those offices and dignities were but the facings or fringes of his greatness. Wotton.

The golden fringe ev'n set the ground on flame,
And drew a precious trail. Dryden.

The shadows of all bodies in this light, were bordered with three parallel fringes, or bands of coloured light, whereof that which was contiguous to the shadow was broadest and most luminous; and that which was remotest from it was narrowest, and so faint as not easily to be visible. Newton.

FRINGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To adorn with fringes;
to decorate with ornamental appendages.

Either side of the bank, fringed with most beautiful trees, reflected the sun's darts. Sidney.

Of silver wings he took a shining pair,
Fringed with gold. Fairfax.

Here, by the sacred bramble ting'd,
My petticoat is doubly fring'd. Swift.

old things vamped up.

FRIPPERY. n. f. [from frippier, French; fripperia, Italian.]

1. The place where old cloaths are fold.

Oh, oh, monster, we know what belongs to a frippery.
Shakespeare.

Lurana is a frippery of bankrupts, who fly thither from Druidia to play their after-game. Heuvel.

2. Old cloaths; cast dresses; tatter'd rags.

Poor poet, that, that would be thought our chief,
Whose works are e'en the frippery of wit,

From brocade is become to bold a thief,
As we, the robb'd, leave rage and pity it. B. Johnson.

The fighting-place now seamen rage supply,
And all the tackling is a frippery. Dans.

Ragfair is a place near the tower of London, where old cloaths and frippery are sold. Notes: See Page's Dictionary.

TO FRISK. v. n. [frizzare, Italian.]

1. To leap; to skip.

Put water into a glass, and wet your finger, and draw it round about the lip of the glass, pressing it somewhat hard;
and after drawing it some few times about, it will make the water frisk and sprinkle up in a fine dew. Boer.

The fish tell a frisking in the net. L'Estrange.

Whether every one hath experimented this tricking intrusion of some frisking ideas, which thus improve the understanding, and hinder it from being better employed, I know not. Locke.

2. To dance in frolic or gaiety.

We are as twin'd lamb, that did frisk it in the sun,
And bleat the one at the other: what we chang'd,
Was innocence for innocence; we knew not
The doctrine of ill-doing. Shakespeare.

About them frisking play'd
All beasts of th' earth. Milton.

A wanton heifer frisked up and down in a meadow, in ease and pleasure. L'Estrange.

Watch the quick motions of the frisking tail,
Then serve their fury with the rushing mane. Dryden.

So Bacchus through the conquer'd Indies rode,
And beafts in gambols frisk'd before their boundless god. Dryden.

Off to the mountains airy tops advanc'd,
The frisking satyrs on the summits danc'd. Alfieri.

Those merry blades,
That frisk it under Pindus' shades. Pope.

Peg faints at the found of an organ, and yet will dance and frisk at the noise of a bagpipe. Shakespeare.

Sly hunters thus, in Borneo's isle,
To catch a monkey by a wile,
The mimic animal amuse;
They place before him gloves and shoes;
Which when the brute puts awkward on,
All his agility is gone:
In vain to frisk or climb he tries;
The huntmen seize the grinning prize. Swift.

FRISK. n. f. [from the verb.] A frolic; a fit of wanton gaiety.

FRISKER. n. f. [from frisk.] A wanton; one not content or settled.

Now I will wear this, and now I will wear that;
Now I will wear I cannot tell what:
All new fashions be pleasant to me:
Now I am a frisker, all men on me look;
What should I do but set cock on the hoop? Genius.

FRISKINESS. n. f. [from frisk.] Gaiety; liveliness. A low word.

FRISKY. adj. [frisque, French, from frisk.] Gay; airy. A

The frith, or haul his cables from the shore? Dryden.

Batavian fleets
Defraud us of the glittering finny swarms
That heave our friths, and crowd up in our faces. Tim.

2. A kind of net. I know not whether this sense be now retained.

The Wear is a frith, reaching through the Ols from the land to low water mark, and having in it a butt or cod with an eye hook; where the fish entering, upon their coming back with the ebb, are stopp'd from issuing out again. Genius.

FRITILLARY. n. f. [frutillare, French.] A plant.

The flower consists of six leaves, and is of the bell-shaped lily flowers, pendulous, naked, and, for the most part, chequered: the style of the flower becomes an oblong fruit, divided into three cells, and filled with flat seeds, lying in the double row: the root consists of two fleshy knobs, for the most part semi-globular, betwixt which arises the flower-stalk. Alfieri.

FRITINANCY. n. f. [from frittinisi, Latin.] The action of an insect, as the cricket or cicada.

The note or frittinancy thereof is far more shrill than that of the locust, and its life short. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FRITTER. n. f. [frutere, French.]

1. A small piece cut to be fried.

Maids, fritters and pancakes ynow see ye make! Swift.

Let slut have one pancake for company sake. See it.

2. A fragment; a small piece.

Sense and putter! have I lived to stand in the taunt of one that makes fritters of English! Shakespeare.

If you strike a solid body that is brittle, as glass or sugar, it breaketh not only where the immediate force is, but breaketh all about into shivers and fritters; the motion, upon the pressure searching all ways, and breaketh where it findeth the body weakest. Bacon.

The ancient errant knights

Won all their ladies hearts in fights;

And cut whole giants into fritters;

To put them into amorous twitters. Shakespeare.

3. A cheefcake; a wig.

2. FRI TTER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cut meat into small pieces to be fried.

2. To break into small particles or fragments.

Joy to great chaos! let division reign!

My racks and tortures soon shall drive them hence;

Break all their nerves, and fritter all their sense. Pope.

How prologues into prefaces decay,

And these too notes are fritter'd quite away. Pope.

FRI VOLOUS. adj. [frivulus, Latin; frivole, Fr.] Slight; trifling; of no moment.

It is frivulus to try we ought not to use bad ceremonies of the church of Rome, and presume all such bad as it pleaseth themselves to dislike. Hobbes.

These seem very frivulus and fruitless; for, by the break of them, little damage can come to the commonwealth. Spenser.

She tam'd the brinded lions,

And spotted mountain pard; but let at nought

The frivulus bolt of Cupid. Milton.

Those things which now seem frivulus and slight,

Will be of serious consequence to you,

When they have made you once ridiculous. Roscommon.

All the impeachments in Greece and Rome seem to have agreed in a notion they had of being concerned, in point of honour, to condemn whatever person they impeached, however frivulus the articles, or however weak the surmises, whereon they were to proceed in their proofs. Swift.

I will not defend any mistake, and do not think myself obliged to answer every frivulus objection. Arbuthnot.

FRI VOLOUSNESS. n. f. [from frivulus.] Want of importance;

triflingness.

FRI VOLOUSLY. adv. [from frivulus.] Triflingly; without weight.

naps of frizee.

Th' humble shrub

And bush, with friz'd hair implicit. Milton.

They frizled and curled their hair with hot irons. Holcut.

I doff'd my shoe, and swear

Therein I spy'd this yellow frizled hair. Gay.

FRI ZLER. n. f. [from frizle.] One that makes short curls.

FRO. adv. [of pro, Saxon.]

1. Backward; regressively. It is only used in opposition to the word, to; to and fro, backward and forward.

The Carthaginians, in all the long Punick war, having spoiled all Spain, rooted out all that were affected to the Romans; and the Romans, having recovered that country, did cut off all that favoured the Carthaginians: so betwixt them both, to and fro, there was scarce a native Spaniard left. Spens.

As when a heap of gather'd thorns is cast,

Now to, now fro, before th' autumnal blast,

Together clung, it rolls around the field. Pope.

2. It is a contraction of from: not now used.

They turn round like grindstones,

Which they dig out fro the delves,

For their bairns bread, wives and selves. Ben. Johnson.

FROCK. n. f. [frac, French.]

1. A dress; a coat.

That monster, custom, is angel yet in this,

That to the use of actions fair and good,

He likewise gives a frock or livery,

That aptly is put on.

or crimped in frying.] A kind of food made by frying bacon inclosed in a pancake.

FROLICK. adj. [vrolijk, Dutch.] Gay; full of levity; full of pranks.

We fairies, that do run

By the triple Hecate's team,

From the presence of the fun,

Following darkness like a dream,

Now are frolick. Shakespeare.

Whether, as some sages sing,

The frolick wind that breathes the Spring,

Zephyr with Aurora playing,

As he met her once a Maying;

There on beds of violets blue,

And fresh-blown roses wash'd in dew,

Fill'd her with thee a daughter fair,

So buxom, blithe, and debonnaire. Milton.

Who ripe, and frolick of his full-grown age,

Roving the Celtic and Iberian fields,

At last betakes him to this ominous wood. Milton.

The gay, the frolick and the loud. Waller.

FROLICK. n. f. [from the adjective.] A wild prank; a flight of whim and levity.

He would be at his frolick once again,

And his pretensions to divinity. Roscommon.

Alcibiades, having been formerly noted for the like frolicks

and excursions, was immediately accused of this. Swift.

While rain depends the pensive cat gives o'er

Her frolicks, and pursues her tail no more. Swift.

To FROLICK. v. n. [from the noun.] To play wild pranks;

to play tricks of levity and gaiety.

Then to her new love let her go,

And deck her in golden array;

Be swift at ev'ry fine show,

And frolick it all the long day. Rowe.

FROLICKLY. adv. [from frolick.] Gaily; wildly.

out what was the form of the earth. Burnet.

He bid her from time to time be comforted. Addison.

7. Out of; noting emission.

When the most high

Eternal Father, from his secret cloud

Amidst, in thunder utter'd his voice. Milton.

Then pierc'd with pain, he shook her haughty head,

Sigh'd from her inward soul, and thus the said. Dryden.

8. Noting progress from premises to inferences.

If an objection be not removed, the conclusion of experience from the time past to the time present will not be found and perfect.

This is evident from that high and refined morality, which shined forth in some of the ancient heathens. South.

9. Noting the place or person from whom a message is brought.

The king is coming, and I must speak with him from the bridge.—How now, Fluellen, cam'st thou from the bridge? Shakspeare.

10. Out of; noting extraction.

From high Meonia's rocky shores I came,

Of poor descent; Acetes is my name. Addison.

11. Because of. Noting the reason or motive of an act or effect.

You are good, but from a nobler cause;

From your own knowledge, not from nature's laws. Dryden.

David celebrates the glory of God from the consideration of the greatness of his works. Tillotson.

We flicken loam from her contagious care;

Grieve for her sorrows, groan for her despair. Prior.

His regiment lies half a mile at least
South from the mighty power of the king. Shakesp.
14. Noting separation or recession.
To die by thee, were but to die in jest;
From thee to die, were torture more than death. Shakesp.
By the sacred radiance of the sun,
The mysteries of Hecate, and the night;
By all the operations of the orbs,
From whom we do exist, and cease to be,
Here I disclaim all my paternal care, Shakspere.
Halt thou becheld, when from the goal they start,
The youthful charioteers, with heaving heart,
Rush to the race, and panting fiercely bear
Th' extremes of sevenfold hope and chilling fear. Dryden.
15. Noting exemption or deliverance.
From jealousy's tormenting strife,
For ever be thy bosom free. Prior.
16. At a distance. Noting absence.

Taught from his tender years the taste of blood. Dryden.
Were there, from all eternity, no memorable actions done
'till about that time? Tillotson.
19. Contrary to.
Any thing so overdone is from the purpose of playing;
whose end, both at the first and now, was and is to hold,
as 'twere, the mirror up to nature. Shakspere.
Do not believe,
That from the sense of all civility,
I thus would play and trifle with your reverence. Shaksp.
Did you draw bonds to forfeit? igno, to break?
Or must we read you quite from what we speak,
And find the truth out the wrong way? Dinne.
20. Noting removal.
Thrice from the ground she leap'd. Dryden.
21. From is very frequently joined by an ellipsis with adverbs:
as, from above, from the parts above; from below, from the places below; of which some are here exemplified.
22. FROM above.
He, which gave them from above such power, for miraculous confirmation of that which they taught, endued them also with wisdom from above, to teach that which they did to confirm. Hosker.
No sooner where his eyes in slumber bound,
When, from above, a more than mortal sound
Invades his ears. Dryden.

Can you, when you have push'd out of your gates the very defender of them, think to front his revenges with easy gloans. Shakespeare.

Some are either to be won to the state in a fast and true manner, or fronted with some other of the same party that may oppose them, and to divide the reputation. Bacon.

I shall front thee, like some flaming ghost,

With all my wrongs about me. Dryden.

2. To stand opposed or overagainst any place or thing. The square will be one of the most beautiful in Italy when this statue is erected, and a townhouse built at one end to front the church that stands at the other. Addison.

To FRONT. v. n. To stand foremost.

I front but in that file,

Where others tell steps with me. Shakespeare.

FRONTAL. n. f. [frontale, Lat. frontal, Fr.] Any external form of medicine to be applied to the forehead, generally composed amongst the ancients of coolers and hypnotics. Quincy.

We may apply intercepts upon the temples of malice : frontals may also be applied. Wifeman.

The torpedo, being alive, stupefies at a distance ; but after death produceth no such effect ; which had they retained, they might have supplied opium, and served as frontals in phrenies. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FRONTATED. adj. [from frons, Latin.] In botany, the frontated leaf of a flower grows broader and broader, and at last perhaps terminates in a right line : used in opposition to cuspated, which is, when the leaves of a flower end in a point. Quincy.

FRONTBOX. n. f. [front and box.] The box in the playhouse from which there is a direct view to the stage.

How vain are all these glories, all our pains,

Unless good sense preserve what beauty gains !

That men may say, when we the frontbox grace,

Behold the first in virtue, as in face. Pope.

FRONTED. adj. [from front.] Formed with a front.

Part fronted brigades form.

FRONTIER. n. f. [frontiere, French.] The marches ; the limit ; the utmost verge of any territory ; the border : properly that which terminates not at the sea, but fronts another country.

They shall be as frontlets between thine eyes. Deuter. vi. 8.

To the forehead frontlets were applied, to restrain and intercept the influx. Wifeman.

FRONTROOM. n. f. [front and room.] An apartment in the forefront of the house.

If your shop stands in an eminent street, the frontrooms are commonly more airy than the backrooms ; and it will be inconvenient to make the frontroom shallow. Mexon.

FRORE. adj. [frozen, Dutch, frozen.] Frozen. This word is not used since the time of Milton.

The parching air

Burns froze, and cold performs th' effect of fire. Milton.

FRORENE. adj. [frozen, frozen, Dutch.] Frozen ; congealed with cold. Obsolete.

O, my heart-blood is well nigh froze I feel,

And my galaxy grown fast to my heel. Spenser.

FROST. n. f. [frore, Saxon.]

1. The last effect of cold ; the power or act of congelation.

This is the state of man : to-day he puts forth

The tender leaves of hopes, to-morrow blossoms,

And bears his blushing honours thick upon him ;

The third day comes a frost, a killing frost,

And when he thinks, good easy man, full surely

His greatness is a ripening, nips his root,

And then he falls. Shakespeare.

When the frost freezes upon wine, only the more watery parts are congealed : there is a mighty spirit which can retreat into itself, and within its own compass lie secure from the freezing impression. South.

2. The appearance of plants and trees sparkling with congelation of dew.

Behold the groves that shine with silver frost,

Their beauty wither'd, and their verdure lost. Pope.

FROSTBITTEN. adj. [frost and bitten.] Nipped or withered by the frost.

The leaves, gathered somewhat before they are too much frostbitten, make excellent mattresses. Mortimer.

FROSTWORK. n. f. [frost and work.] Work in which the substance is laid on with inequalities, like the dew congealed upon shrubs.

By nature shap'd to various figures, those

The fruitful rain, and these the hail compose ;

The snowy fleece and curious frostwork these,

Produce the dew, and those the gentle breeze. Blackmore.

FROSTY. adj. [from frost.]

1. Having the power of congelation ; excessive cold.

For all my blood in Rome's great quarrel fled,

Be pitiful to my condemned fons. Shakespeare.

The air, if very cold, irritateth the flame, and maketh it burn more fiercely ; as fire scorseth in frosty weather. Bacon.

A gnat, all starved with cold and hunger, went out one frosty morning to a bee-hive. L'Estrange.

2. Chill in affection ; without warmth of kindness or courage.

What a frosty spirited rogue is this ! Shakespeare.

3. Hoary ; gray-haired ; resembling frost.

Where is loyalty ?

If it be banish'd from the frosty head,

Where shall it find a harbour in the earth ? Shakespeare.

FROTH. n. f. [frore, Danish and Scottish.]

1. Spume ; foam ; the bubbles caused in liquors by agitation.

His hideous tail then hurried he about,

And therewith all enwrapt the nimble thighs

Of his froth foamy flood. Spenser.

When wind expirith from under the sea, as it causeth some rebounding of the water, so it causeth some light motions of bubbles, and white circles of froth. Bacon.

Surging waves against a solid rock,

Though all to shivers dash'd, th' affault renew ;

Vain batt'ry, and in froth or bubbles end. Milton.

The useless froth swims on the surface, but the pearl lies covered with a mass of waters. Glowville.

9 X

The scatter'd ocean flies;
Black sands, discolour'd frab, and mingled mud arise. Dryd.
They were the frab my raging folly mov'd
When it boil'd up; I knew not then I lov'd,
Yet then lov'd it most. Dryden.

If now the colours of natural bodies are to be mingled, let water, a little thickened with soap, be agitated to raise a frab; and after that frab has stood a little, there will appear, to one that shall view it intently, various colours every where in the surfaces of the several bubbles; but to one that shall go so far off that he cannot distinguish the colours from one another, the whole frab will grow white, with a perfect whiteness. Newton's Opticks.

A painter, having finished the picture of a horse, excepting the loose frab about his mouth and his bridle; and after many unsuccessful essays, despairing to do that to his satisfaction, in a great rage threw a sponge at it, all besmeared with the colours, which fortunately hitting upon the right place, by one bold stroke of chance most exactly supplied the want of skill in the artist. Bentley.

2. Any empty or senseless show of wit or eloquence.
3. Any thing not hard, solid, or substantial.
Who eateth his veal, pig and lamb being frab,
Shall twice in a week go to bed without broth. Tusser.

TO FROTH. v. n. [from the noun.] To foam; to throw out spume; to generate spume.

He frets within, frab treasure at his mouth,
And churns it through his teeth. Dryden.

FROTHILY. adv. [from frab.] With foam; with spume.

2. In an empty trifling manner.

FROTHY. adj. [from frab.] 1. Full of foam, froth, or spume.

The sap of trees is of differing natures; some watery and clear, as vines, beeches, pears; some thick, as apples; some gummy, as cherries; and some frothy, as elms. Bacon.
Behold a frab substance rise;
Be cautious, or your bottle flies. Swift.

2. Soft; not solid; waiting.
Their bodies are so solid and hard as you need not fear that bathing should make them frab. Bacon.

3. Vain; empty; trifling.
What's a voluptuous dinner, and the frab vanity of discourse that commonly attends these pompous entertainments? What is it but a mortification, to a man of sense and virtue? L'Estrange's Fables.

Though the principles of religion were never so clear and evident, yet they may be made ridiculous by vain and frab as; as the gravest and wisest person in the world may be abused by being put in a fool's coat. Tillotson.

FROUNCE. n. s. A word used by falconers for a dissembler, in which white little gathers about the hawk's bill.

TO FROUCE. v. a. [from the noun.] To frizzle or curl the hair about the face. This word was at first probably used in contempt.

Some frounce their curled hair in courtly guise,
Some prank their ruffs, and others timely dight
Their gay attire. Spenser.
Some warlike sign must be used; either a slovenly buskin,
or an overbearing frounce head. Ascham.

Thus, night, oft see me in thy pale career,
Not trick'd and frounc'd as the was wont,
With the Antick boy to hunt. Milton.

PECCOATS in frouzy heaps.
When first Diana leaves her bed,
Vapours and steams her looks disgrace;
A frouzy dirty-colour'd red
Sits on her cloudly wrinkled face. Swift.

FROWARD. adj. [from froward, Saxon.] Peevish; ungovernable; angry; perverse: the contrary to isward.

The froward pain of mine own heart made me to delight to punish him, whom I esteemed the chiefest let in the way. Sidney.

She's not froward, but modest as the dove:
She is not hot, but temperate as the morn. Shakespeare.
Whole ways are crooked, and they froward in their paths. Prov. ii. 15.

Time moveth so round, that a froward retention of custom is as turbulent a thing as innovation. Bacon.

'Tis with froward men, and froward fashions too, as 'tis with froward children; they'll be sooner quieted by fear than by any sense of duty. L'Estrange.

They help or occasion sleep, as we find by the common use and experience of rocking froward children in cradles. Temple.

FROWARDLY. adv. [from froward.] Peevishly; perversely. I had me and was worthy, and he went frowardly in the way of his heart. Isaiah.

FROWARDNESS. n. s. [from froward.] Peccableness; perverseness.
How many frowardnesses of ours does he (another) how many indignities does he pass by? how many affronts does he put up at our hands? Isaiah.

We'll mutually forget
The warmth of youth and frowardness of age. Alfina.

FROWER. n. s. [I know not the etymology.] A clearing tool.

A frower of iron for cleaving of lath,
With roll for a sawpit, good husbandry hath. Taylor.

TO FROWN. v. a. [frower, old French, to wrinkle. Sinner.] To express displeasure by contracting the face to wrinkles; to look stern.

Say, that the frown; I'll say, she looks as clear
As morning roses newly wash'd with dew. Shakespeare.

They chide their magnificence;
And such a one as he, who puts his shall,
His popular shall, against a graver bench
Than ever frown'd. Shakespeare.

How now, daughter, what makes that forehead so? You are too much of late i' th' frown.
—Thou wast a pretty fellow, when thou hadst no need to care for her frowning. Shakespeare.

Heroes in animated marble frown.
The wood,
Whose shady horrors on a rising brow
Way'd high, and frown'd upon the stream below. Pope.

FROWN. n. s. [from the verb.] A wrinkled look; a look of displeasure.

Patiently endure that frown of fortune, and by some notable exploit win again her favour. Isaiah.

In his half-clos'd eyes
Stern vengeance yet and hostile terror stand;
His front yet threatens, and his frown commands. Pope.

FROWNINGLY. adv. [from frown.] Sternly; with a look of displeasure.

What, look'd he frowningly?
—A count'nance more in sorrow than in anger. Shakespeare.

FROWY. adj. Muffy; molly. This word is now out of use; but instead of it frouzy.

But if they with thy gotes should yede,
They soon might be corrupted;
Or like not of the frouzy fede,
Or with the weeds be gluted. Isaiah.

FROZEN. part. pass. of freeze.
Against whom was the fine frozen knight, frozen in fray;
but his armour so naturally representing ice, and his countenance so lively answering thereto, as yet did I never see any thing that pleased me better. Isaiah.

How dire a tempest from Mycenæ pour'd,
Our plains, our temples, and our town devour'd:
What was the wail of war, what fierce alarms
Shook Asia's crown with European arms;
Ev'n such have heard, if any such there be,
Whose earth is bounded by the frozen sea. Dryden.

Fierce Boreas, with his offspring, illies forth
T' invade the frozen waggon of the North. Dryden.

A cheerful blaze arose, and by the fire
They warm'd their frozen feet, and dry'd their wet attire. Dryden's Fables and last.

F. R. S. Fellow of the Royal Society.
Who this profess,
Shine in the dignity of F. R. S. Pope.

FRUCTIFEROUS. adj. [fructifer, Lat.] Bearing fruit. Isaiah.

TO FRUCTIFY. v. a. [fructifer, French.] To make fruitful; to fertilize.

The legal levies the sovereign raises, as an expence which the sun exhales, which fall down in sweet flowers to fructify the earth. Isaiah.

Where e'er she looks, behold some sudden birth
Adorns the trees, and fructifies the earth. Gravina.

TO FRUCTIFY. v. n. To bear fruit.
It watereth the heart, to the end it may fructify; which the virtuous, in trouble, full of magnanimity and courage, and serveth as a most approved remedy against all diseases, and heavy accidents which befall men in this present life. Isaiah.

Thus would there nothing fructify, either near or remote them, the sun being horizontal to the poles. Isaiah.

FRUCTIFICATION. n. s. [from fructify.] The act of causing or of bearing fruit; fecundation; fertility.

That the sap doth powerfully rise in the Springs, to fructify the plant in a capacity of fructification, he that hath beheld how many gallons of water may be drawn from a beech-tree, hath slender reason to doubt. Bacon's Fables.

FRUCTUOUS. adj. [fructuex, Fr. from fructus.] Fruitful; fertile; impregnating with fertility.

Here to the light
Apples of price, and plenteous sheaves of corn
Oft interlac'd occur; and both imbibe
Fitting congenial juice, so rich the soil,
So much does fructuous moisture o'erabound! Isaiah.

FRUGAL. adj. [frugalis, Latin; frugal', Fr.] Thrifty; sparing; parsimonious; not prodigal; not profuse; not lavish.

If through mists he shoots his fullen beams,
Frugal of light, in loofe and straggling streams,
Suspect a drilling day. Dryden.

FRUGALLY. adv. [from frugal.] Parsimoniously; sparingly; thriftily.

Mean time young Pafimond his marriage pres'd,
And frugally resolv'd, the charge to shun,
To join his brother's bridal with his own. Dryden.

FRUGALITY. n. f. [frugalité, French; frugalitas, Latin.] Thrift; parsimony; good husbandry.

As for the general sort of men, frugality may be the cause of drinking water; for that is no small saving, to pay nothing for one's drink. Bacon.

Frugality and bounty too,
Those diff'rent virtues, meet in you. Waller.
In this frugality of your praises, some things I cannot omit. Dryden.

The boundaries of virtues are indivisible lines: it is impossible to march up close to the frontiers of frugality without entering the territories of parsimony. Arbutnot.

FRUGIFEROUS. adj. [frugifer, Latin.] Bearing fruit. Anf.

FRUIT. n. f. [fructus, Latin; frucht, Welch; Frucht, Ainf.]

1. The product of a tree or plant in which the seeds are contained.

The strawberry grows under the nettle,
And wholesome berries thrive and ripen best,
Neighbour'd by fruit of bawky kind. Shakespeare.

2. That part of a plant which is taken for food.

By tasting of that fruit forbid,
Where they sought knowledge, they did error find. Davies.
See how the rising fruits the gardens crown,
Imbibe the fun, and make his light their own. Blackmore.

3. Production.

The fruit of the spirit is in all goodness and righteousness, and truth. Ex. v. 9.

4. The offspring of the womb; the young of any animal.

Canst thou their reck'nings keep; the time compute,
When their twol'n bellies shall enlarge their fruit. Sandsy.

5. Advantage gained by any enterprise or conduct.

What is become of all the king of Sweden's victories?
Where are the fruits of them at this day? Or of what benefit will they be to posterity? Swift.

Another fruit, from considering things in themselves, will be, that each man will pursue his thoughts in that method which will be most agreeable to the nature of the thing, and to his apprehension of what it suggests to him. Locke.

6. The effect or consequence of any action.

She blushed when she considered the effect of granting; she was pale, when she remembered the fruits of denying. Sidney.

They shall eat of the fruit of their own way. Prov. i. 31.

If I live in the flesh, this is the fruit of my labour. Philip. i.

than the earth remain fruitful in the sun's continual absence. Sidney.

2. Actually bearing fruit.

Adonis' gardens,

That one day bloom'd, and fruitful were the next. Shak.

3. Prolifick; childbearing; not barren.

Hear, nature, hear; dear goddess, hear a father!

Suspend thy purpose, if thou didst intend

To make this creature fruitful!

Into her womb convey sterility. Shakespeare.

I have copied nature, making the youths amorous and the damsels fruitful. Gay.

4. Plenteous; abounding in any thing.

While you, my lord, the rural shades admire,

And from Britannia's publick posts retire,

Me into foreign realms my fate conveys,

Through nations fruitful of immortal lays. Addison.

FRUITFULLY. adv. [from fruitful.]

1. In such a manner as to be prolific.

How sacred seeds of sea, and air, and earth,

And puter fire through universal night,

And empty space, did fruitfully unite. Reformen.

2. Plentifully; abundantly.

You have many opportunities to cut him off: if you will want not, time and place will be fruitfully offered. Shaksf.

FRUITFULNESS. n. f. [from fruitful.]

1. Fertility; fecundity; plentiful production.

Neither can we ascribe the same fruitfulness to any part of the earth, nor the same virtue to any plant thereon growing, that they had before the flood. Raleigh.

2. The quality of being prolific.

The goddess, present at the match she made,

So bless'd the bed, such fruitfulness convey'd,

That ere ten moons had sharpen'd either horn,

To crown their bliss, a lovely boy was born. Dryden.

3. Exuberant abundance.

The remedy of fruitfulness is easy, but no labour will help the contrary: I will like and praise some things in a young writer, which yet, if he continues in, I cannot but justly hate him for. Ben. Johnson.

FRUITGROVES. n. f. [fruit and groves.] Shades, or close plantations of fruit trees.

The faithful slave,

Whom to my nuptial train Icarus gave,

To tend the fruitgroves? Petr.

FRUITION. n. f. [fruer, Latin.] Enjoyment; possession; pleasure given by possession or use.

Man doth not seem to rest satisfied either with fruition of that wherewith his life is preferred, or with performance of such actions as advance him most deservedly in estimation. Hooker.

I am driv'n by breath of her renown,

Either to seek shipwreck, or arrive

Where I may have fruition of her love. Shakespeare.

God riches and renown to men imparts,

Ev'n all they wish; and yet their narrow hearts

Cannot so great a fluency receive,

But their fruition to a stranger leave. Sandy.

Affliction generally disables a man from pursuing those vices in which the guilt of men consists: if the affliction be on his body, his appetites are weakened, and capacity of fruition destroyed. Rogers.

Wit once, like beauty, without art or dress,

Naked and unadorn'd, could find success;

'Till by fruition, novelty destroy'd,

The nymph must find new charms to be enjoy'd. Gravv.

FRUITIVE. adj. [from the noun.] Enjoying; possessing;

having the power of enjoyment.

To what our longings for fruitive or experimental knowledge, it it reserved among the prerogatives of being in heaven to know how happy we shall be, when there. Boyle.

FRUITLESS. adj. [from fruit.]

1. Barren of fruit; not bearing fruit.

The Spaniards of Mexico, for the first forty years, could not make our kind of wheat bear seed; but it grew up as high as the trees, and was fruitless. Raleigh.

2. Vain; productive of no advantage; idle; unprofitable.

O! let me not, quoth he, return again

Back to the world, whose joys fo fruitless are;

But let me here for ay in peace remain,

Or straightway on that last long voyage fare. Spenfer.

Serpent! we might have spar'd our coming hither;

Fruitless to me, though fruit be here t'excel. Milton.

3. Without off-spring.

Upon my head they plac'd a fruitless crown,

And put a barren scepter in my gripe;

No fen of mine succeeding. Shakespeare.

FRUITLESSLY. adv. [from fruitless.] Vainly; idly; unprofitably.

2. Abounding in any quality good or bad.

With pretence from Strephon her to guard,
He met her full, but full of wantfulness.

You should tread a course
Pretty and full of view.

Followers, who make themselves as trumpets of the commendation of those they follow, are full of inconvenience; for they taint business through want of secrecy, and they export honour from a man, and make him a return in envy.

In that sweet season, as in bed I lay,

9 Y

I turn'd

I turn'd my weary side, but fill in vain,
Though full of youthful health and void of pain. Dryd.
He is full of wants which he cannot supply, and compass'd about with infirmities which he cannot remove. Tillotson.

From yon bright heaven our author fetch'd his fire,
And paints the passions that your eyes inspire;
Full of that flame, his tender scenes he warms,
And flames his goddess by your matchless charms. Grave.

3. Stored with any thing; well supplied with any thing.
Full of days was he; Tickell.

Two ages past, he liv'd the third to see.

fast as occasions were offered. Hammud.

The resurrection of Jesus from the dead hath given the world full assurance of another life. Tillotson.

9. Complete without abatement; at the utmost degree.
At the end of two full years Pharaoh dreamed.
After hard riding plunge the horses into water, and allow them to drink as they please; but gallop them full speed, to warm the water in their bellies. Swift.

10. Containing the whole matter; expressing much.
Where my expressions are not so full as his, either our language or art were defective; but where mine are fuller than his, they are but the impressions which the often reading of him hath left upon my thoughts. Denham.

Should a man go about with never so set study to describe such a natural form of the year before the deluge as that which is at present established, he could scarcely do it in so few words, so fit and proper, so full and express. Woodward.

11. Strong; not faint; not attenuated.
I did never know so full a voice issue from so empty a heart;
but the saying is true, the empty vessel makes the greatest sound. Shakespeare.

Barrels placed under the floor of a chamber, make all noises in the same more full and resounding. Bacon.

Dryden taught to join
The varying verse, the full resounding line. Pope.

12. Mature; perfect.
In the Sultanaty of the Mamalukes, slaves reigned over families of free men; and much like were the case, if you suppose a nation, where the custom were that after full age the author to the full. Dryden.

Sicilian tortures and the brazen bull
Are emblems, rather than express the full
Of what he feels. Dryden.

If where the rules not far enough extend,
Some lucky licence answer to the full
Th' intent propos'd, that licence is a rule. Pope.

2. The highest state or degree.
The Swan's down feather,
That stands upon the swell at full of tide,
Neither way inclines. Shakespeare.

3. The whole; the total.
The king hath won, and hath sent out
A speedy power to encounter you, my lord:
This is the news at full. Shakespeare.

But what at full I know, thou know'st no part;
I knowing all my peril, thou no art. Shakespeare.

4. The state of being full.
When I had fed them to the full, Jer.

5. [Applied to the moon.] The time in which the moon makes a perfect orb.
Brains in rabbits, woodcocks, and calves, are fullest in the full of the moon. Bacon.

FULL. adv.
1. Without abatement.
In the unity of place they are full as scrupulous; for many of their critics limit to that very spot of ground where the play is supposed to begin. Dryden.

A modest blush he wears, not torn'd by art;
Free from deceit his face, and full as free his heart. Dryden.

The most judicious writer is sometimes mistaken after all his care; but the hasty critic, who judges on a view, is full as liable to be deceived. Dryden.

Since you may
Suspect my courage, if I should not lay,
The pawn I proffer shall be full as good. Dryden.

2. With the whole effect.
'Tis the pencil, thrown luckily full upon the horse's mouth to express the foam, which the painter, with all his skill, could not perform without it. Dryden.

From harmony, from heavenly harmony,
This universal frame began:
From harmony to harmony,
Through all the compass of the notes it ran,
The diapason closing full in man. Dryden.

3. Exactly.
Full in the centre of the sacred wood,
An arm aritheth the Stygian flood. Shakespeare.

Full nineteen sailors did the ship convey,
A shole of nineteen dolphins round her play. Shakespeare.

4. Directly.
He met her full, but full of warefulness.
He then confronts the battle;
And on his ample forehead aiming full,
The deadly stroke descending pierc'd the skull. Shakespeare.

At length relolv'd, he throws with all his force
Full at the temples of the warrior horse. Dryden.

5. It is placed before adverbs and adjectives, to intensify strengthen their signification.
Why on your shield, so goodly fear'd,
Bear you the picture of that lady's head?
Full lively is the semblant, though the substance dead. Shakespeare.

I was set at work
Among my malis; full little, God knows, looking Either for such men or such business. Shakespeare.

Full well ye reject the commandment.
Adam was all in tears, and to his guide
Lamenting turn'd a full sad. Shakespeare.

You full little think that you must be the beginner of the discourse yourself. Dryden.

Full little thought of him the gentle knight.
Full well the god his filer's envy knew,
And what her aims and what her arts pursue.
'Tis here a perquisite full as honest, by which you have best part of a bottle of wine for yourself. Shakespeare.

FULL is much used in composition to intimate any thing arrived at its highest state, or utmost degree.
FULL-BLOWN. adj. [full and blown.]

1. Spread to the utmost extent, as a perfect blossom.
My glories are past danger; they're full blown:
Things, that are blasted, are but in the bud. Shakespeare.

My full-blown youth already fades apace;
Of our short bei g 'tis the shortest space!
2. Stretched by the wind to the utmost extent.
He who with bold Cratinus is inspir'd,
With zeal and equal ind gnation fir'd;
Who at enormous villany turns pale,
And steers against it with a full-blown sail. Dryden.

FULL-BOTTOMED. adj. [full and bottom.] Having a large bottom.

I was obliged to sit at home in my morning-gown, having pawnd a new suit of cloaths and a full-bottomed wig for a week of money. Shakespeare.

FULL-EARED. [full and ear.] Having the heads full of grain.
As flames roll'd by the winds conspiring force,
O'er full-eared corn, or torrents raging courts. Dryden.

FULL-EYED. [full and eye.] Having large prominent eyes.

FULL-FED. [full and fed.] Sated; fat; faginated.
All as a patridge plump, full-fed and fair,
She form'd this image of well-bodied air. Pope.

FULL-LADEN. [full and laden.] Laden 'till there can be no more.

It were unfit that so excellent a reward as the Gospel promises should flood down, like fruit upon a full-laden bough, to be plucked by every idle and wasteful hand. Shakespeare.

FULL-SPRE'AD. [full and spread.] Spread to the utmost extent.

How easy 'tis, when destiny proves kind,
With full-spread sails to run before the wind;
But those that gainst stiff gales lavinging go,
Must be at once relolv'd and fullful too.

Dryden.

FULL-SUMMED. [full and summed.] Complete in all its parts.

The time was that the cedar stretched forth his imperial branches as far as the mountains of the moon, and that the king of birds nested within his leaves, thick feathered, and with full-summed wings fastening his talons east and west; but now the eagle is become half naked.

Howel.

To FULLE. v. a. [fulle, Latin.] To cleanse cloth from its oil or grease.

FULLAGE. n. f. [from full.] The money paid for fulling or cleansing cloth.

FULLER. n. f. [fulle, Latin.] One whose trade is to cleanse cloth.

The clothiers have put off

The spinners, carders, fullers, weavers.

Shakespeare.

His raiment became thinning, exceeding white as snow; so as no fuller on earth can whiten them.

Mark, ix. 3.

FULLER'S EARTH. n. f.

Fuller's earth is a sort of a close texture, extremely soft and unctuous to the touch; when dry it is of a greyish brown colour, in all degrees, from very pale to almost black, and generally has something of a greenish cast in it. The finest fuller's earth is dug in our own island.

Hill.

The fuller's earth of England is very various, and it very much exceeds any yet discovered abroad in goodness; which is one great reason why the English surpass all other nations in the woollen manufacture.

Woodward on Fyffils.

FULLERY. n. f. [from fuller.] The place where the trade of a fuller is exercised.

FULLINGMILL. n. f. [full and mill.] A mill where the water raises hammers which beat the cloth 'till it is cleansed.

By large hammers, like those used for paper and fulling-mills, they beat their hemp.

Mortimer.

FULLY. adv. [from full.]

1. Without vacancy.

2. Completely; without lack; without more to be desired.

There are many graces for which we may not cease hourly to sue, graces which are in bestowing always, but never come to be fully had in this present life; and therefore, when all things here have an end, endless thanks must have their beginning in a state which bringeth the full and final satisfaction of all such perpetual desires.

Hobbs.

He fully possessed the entire revelation he had received from God, and had thoroughly digested it.

Lake.

The goddess cry'd

It is enough, I'm fully satisfy'd.

Albion.

FULMINANT. adj. [fulm. nant, Fr. fulminant, Latin.] Thundering; making a noise like thunder.

To FULMINATE. v. n. [fulmine, Lat. fulminare, French.]

1. To thunder.

2. To make a loud noise or crack.

Whilst it was in fusion we cast into it a live coal, which presently kindled it, and made it boil and flash for a pretty while; after which we cast in another glowing coal, which made it fulminate afresh.

Boyle.

In dampa one is called the suffocating, and the other the fulminating damp.

Woodward's Natural History.

3. To issue out ecclesiastical censures.

To FULMINATE. v. a. To throw out as an object of terror.

As excommunication is not greatly regarded here in England, as now fulminated; so this constitution is out of use among us in a great measure.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

FULMINATION. n. f. [fulminatio, Latin; fulminacion, French; from fulminate.]

1. The act of thundering.

2. Denunciations of censure.

The fulmination from the Vatican were turned into ridicule.

Albiff's Parergon.

FULMINATORY. adj. [fulminant, Latin; from fulminate.]

Thundering; striking horror.

FULLNESS. n. f. [from full.]

1. The state of being filled so as to have no part vacant.

Your heave-offering shall be reckoned the fulness of the wine-press.

Numb. xviii. 27.

To the houses I wished nothing more than safety, fulness, and freedom.

King Charles.

2. The state of abounding in any quality good or bad.

3. Completeness; such as leaves nothing to be desired.

Your enjoyments are so complete, I turn wishes into gratulations, and congratulating their fulness only with their continuance.

South.

4. Completeness from the coalition of many parts.

The king set forwards to London, receiving the acclamations and applauses of the people as he went; which indeed were true and unfeigned, as might well appear in the very demonstrations and fulness of the cry.

Bacon's Henry VII.

5. Completeness; freedom from deficiency.

He is the half part of a blessed man,
Left to be finished by such as the;
And the fair divided excellence,
Whose fulness of perfection lies in him.

Shakespeare.

6. Repletion; satiety.

I need not instance in the habitual intemperance of rich tables, nor the evil accidents and effects of fulness, pride and lust, wantonness and softness.

Taylor's Ru's of Living Holy.

7. Plenty; wealth.

To lapse in fulness

Is forer than to lie for need; and fallhood

Is worse in kings than beggars.

Shakespeare. Cymbeline.

8. Struggling perturbation; swelling in the mind.

A principal fruit of friendship is the ease and discharge of the fulness of the heart, which passions of all kinds do cause and induce.

Bacon's Essays.

9. Largeness; extent.

There wanted the fulness of a plot, and variety of characters to form it as it ought; and perhaps something might have been added to the beauty of the style.

Dryden.

10. Force of sound, such as fills the ear; vigour.

This sort of pastoral derives almost its whole beauty from a natural ease of thought and smoothness of verse; whereas that of most other kinds consists in the strength and fulness of both.

Pope.

FULSOME. adj. [from fulle, Saxon, foul.]

1. Naufeous; offensive.

The faithful shepherd peel'd me certain wands;

And in the doing of the deed of kind,

He fluck them up before the fulsome ewes.

Shakespeare.

He that brings fulsome objects to my view,

With naufeous images my fancy fills,

And all goes down like ozymel of squills.

Recommen.

Now half the youth of Europe are in arms,

How fulsome must it be to stay behind,

And die of rank diseases here at home?

Ottway's Orphan.

2. Of a rank odious smell.

White fustion is of a dainty smell, and bean-flowers; again, if the plant puts forth white flowers only, and those not thin or dry, they are commonly of rank and fulsome smell.

Bacon's Natural History.

3. Tending to obscenity.

A certain epigram, which is ascribed to the emperor, is more fulsome than any passage I have met with in our poet.

Dryden.

FULSOMELY. adv. [from fulsome.] Naufously; rankly; obscenely.

FULSOMENESS. n. f. [from fulsome.]

1. Naufousness.

2. Rank smell.

3. Obscenity.

No decency is considered, no fulsomeness is omitted, no venom is wanting, as far as dulness can supply it.

Dryden.

FUMADO. n. f. [fumata, Latin.] A smoked fish.

Fish that serve for the hotter countries, they used at first to fume, by hanging them up on long sticks one by one, drying them with the smoke of a soft and continual fire, from which they purchased the name of fumados.

Carew.

FUMAGE. n. f. [from fumata, Latin.] Hearthmoney.

Ditt.

FUMATORY. n. f. [fumaria, Lat. fumeterre, Fr.] See FUMITORY.

It hath divided leaves resembling those of the umbelliferous plants; the flowers, which are collected into a spike, are of an anomalous figure, somewhat resembling a papilionaceous flower, consisting of two petals or leaves, open like two lips, the upper lip ending in a spur: the footstalk is joined to the middle part of the flower: the fruit is either of a long or a round figure, which is like a pod.

Miller.

Her fallow leas

The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumatory,

Doth root upon.

Shakespeare. Henry V.

To FUM'BLE. v. n. [fomme'len, Dutch.]

1. To attempt any thing awkwardly or ungainly.

Our mechanic thefts will have their atoms never once to have fumbled in these their motions, nor to have produced any inept system.

Cudworth.

2. To puzzle; to strain in perplexity.

Am not I a friend to help you out? you would have been fumbling half an hour for this excuse.

Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

3. To play childishly.

I saw him fumble with the sheets, and play with flowers, and smile upon his finger's end.

Shakespeare. Henry V.

To FUM'BLE. v. a. To manage awkwardly.

As many farewells as be stars in heav'n,

With distinct beat and confign'd kisses to them,

He fumbles up all in one loose adieu.

Shakespeare.

His greasy bald-pate choir

Came fumbling o'er the beads, in such an agony,

'They told 'em false for fear.

Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

FUMBLER. n. f. [from fumble.] One who acts awkwardly.

FUMBLINGLY. adv. [from fumble.] In an awkward manner.

FUME. n. f. [fume, French; fumus, Latin.]

1. Smoke.

- Thus fighting fires a while themselves consume:
But straight, like Turks, forc'd on to win or die,
They first lay tender bridges of their fume,
And o'er the breach in unctuous vapours fly. Dryden
2. Vapour; any volatile parts flying away.
Love is a smoke rain'd with the fume of fights;
Being purg'd, a fire sparkling in lovers eyes. Shakespeare
It were good to try the saking of fumes by pipes, as they do in tobacco, of other things, to dry and comfort. Bacon
In winter, when the heat without is less, it becomes so far condensed as to be visible, flowing out of the mouth in form of a fume, or crasser vapour; and may, by proper vessels, set in a strong freezing mixture, be collected in a considerable quantity.
Woodward's Natural History

3. Exhalation from the stomach.
The fumes of drink discompose and stupify the brains of a man overcharged with it. South's Sermons

- Plung'd in sloth welie, and snore supine,
As fill'd with fumes of undigested wine. Dryden
Pow'r, like new wine, does your weak brain surprize,
And its mad fumes in hot discourses rise;
But time these yielding vapours will remove:
Mean while I taste the sober joys of love. Dryden

4. Rage; heat of mind; passion.
The fumes of his passion do really intoxicate and confound his judging and discerning faculty. South

5. Any thing unsubstantial.
When Duncan is asleep, his two chamberlains
Will I with wine and wassail so convince,
That memory, the warder of the brain,
Shall be a fume. Shakespeare Macbeth

6. Idle conceit; vain imagination.
Plato's great year would have some effect, not in renewing the state of like individuals; for that is the fume of those, that conceive the celestial bodies have more accurate influences upon these things below, than indeed they have; but in gross. Bacon's Essays

- To lay aside all that may seem to have a show of fume and fancies, and to speak solids, a war with Spain is a mighty work.
Bacon's Works with Spain

To FUME, v. a. [fumer, French; fumo, Latin.]

1. To smoke.

- Their pray'r's pass'd
Dimensionless through heav'nly doors; then clad
With incense, where the golden altar fum'd,
By their great intercessor, came in light
Before the Father's throne. Milton's Paradise Lost

- From thence the fuming trail began to spread,
And lambent glories danc'd about her head. Dryden
Strait hover round the fair her airy band;
Some, as the fipp'd, the fuming liquor fann'd. Pope

2. To vapour; to yield exhalations.
Tie up the libertine in a field of feasts,
Keep his brain fuming. Shakespeare Antony and Cleopatra

- Whole constant cups lay fuming to his brain,
And always boil in each extended vein. Rowe's

3. To pass away in vapours.
We have
No anger in our eyes, no storm, no lightning;
Our hate is spent and fum'd away in vapour,
Before our hands be at work. Ben. Johnson's Catiline

- Their parts are kept from fuming away by their fixity, and also by the vast weight and density of the atmospheres incumbent upon them. Chenue's Phil. Princ.

- The first fresh dawn then wak'd the gladden'd race
Of uncorrupted man, nor blush'd to see
The sluggard sleep beneath its sacred beam;
For their light slumbers gentle fum'd away. Thomson

4. To be in a rage.
When he knew his rival free'd and gone,
He swells with wrath; he makes outrageous moan;
He frets, he fumes, he flares, he stamps the ground,
The hollow tow'r with clamours rings around. Dryden

- To FUME, v. a.
1. To smoke; to dry in the smoke.
Those that serve for hot countries they used at first to fume, by hanging them upon long sticks one by one, and drying them with the smoke of a soft fire. Carew

2. To perfume with odours in the fire.
She fum'd the temples with an od'rous flame,
And oft before the sacred altars came,
To pray for him who was an empty name. Dryden

- The fuming of the holes with brimstone, garlick, or other unfavoury things, will drive moles out of the ground. Mortimer

3. To disperse in vapours.
The heat will fume away most of the scent. Mortimer

- FUMETTE, n. f. [French.] A word introduced by cooks, and the pupils of cooks, for the stink of meat.

- A haunch of venison made her sweet,
Unless it had the right fumette. Swift

- FUMID, adj. [fumidus, Latin.] Smoky; vaporous.

A craft and fumid exhalation is caused from the combat of the sulphur and iron with the acid and nitrous spirits of aquefurtii. Brown's Vulgar Errors

FUMIDITY, n. f. [from fumid.] Smokiness; tendency to smoke. Lit.

To FUMIGATE, v. n. [from fumus, Latin; fumigar, Fr.]
1. To smoke; to perfume by smoke or vapour.

Wouldst thou preserve thy family's family,
With fragrant thyme the city fumigate,
And break the waxen walls to save the state. Dryden

2. To medicate or heal by vapours.
FUMIGATION, n. f. [fumigatio, Latin; fumigation, French;
from fumigare.]

1. Scents raised by fire.
Fumigations, often repeated, are very beneficial. Arbuthnot
My fumigation is to Venus, just
The souls of roses, and red coral's dust;
And, last, to make my fumigation good,
'Tis mixt with sparrows brains and pigeons blood. Dryden

2. The application of medicines to the body in fumes.
FUMINGLY, adv. [from fume.] Angriely; in a rage.

That which we move for our better learning and instruction fake, turneth unto anger and choler in them they grow altogether out of quietness with it; they answer fumingly, that they are ashamed to desile their pens with making answer to such idle questions. Hobbes

FUMITER, n. f. See FUMATORY.
Why, he was met even now,
As mad as the vext sea; finging loud,
Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow-weeds. Shakespeare

FUMOUS, adj. [fumosus, French; from fume.] Producing fumes.

From dice and wine the youth retir'd to rest,
And puff'd the fuming god from out his breast:
Ev'n then he dreamt of drink and lucky play;
More lucky had it lasted 'till the day. Dryden

FUN, n. f. [A low cant word.] Sport; high merriment; frolicksome delight.

Don't mind me, though, for all my fun and jokes,
You bards may find us bloods good-natur'd folks. Moss

FUNCTION, n. f. [functio, Latin.]
1. Discharge; performance.
There is hardly a greater difference between two things than there is between a representing commoner in the function of his public calling, and the same person in common life. Swift

2. Employment; office.
The ministry is not now bound to any one tribe: now none is excluded from that function of any degree, state, or falling. Watts

You have paid the heav'n's your function, and the prisoner
the very debt of your calling. Shakespeare Measure for Measure

Nor was it any policy of state, or obliquity of will, or partiality of affection either to the men or their function, which fixed me. King Charles

This double function of the goddess gives a considerable light and beauty to the ode which Horace has addressed to her.

Let not these indignities discourage us from asserting the just privileges and pre-eminence of our holy function and character.
Addison's Remarks on Italy

3. Single act of any office.
Without difference those functions cannot, in orderly sort,
be executed. Hobbes

They have several offices and prayers against fire, tempests, and especially for the dead, in which functions they use sacerdotal garments. Stillington

4. Trade; occupation.
Follow your function; go, and batten on cold bits. Shakespeare

5. Office of any particular part of the body.
The bodies of men, and other animals, are excellently well fitted for life and motion; and the several parts of them well adapted to their particular functions. Bentley's Sermons

6. Power; faculty.
Tears in his eyes, distraction in his aspect,
A broken voice, and his whole function fasting
With forms to his conceit. Shakespeare Hamlet

Nature seems
In all her functions weary of herself:
My race of glory run, and race of shame;
And I shall shortly be with them that rest. Milton

Whatever warms the heart, or fills the head,
As the mind opens, and its functions spread,
Imagination plies her dang'rous art,
And pours it all upon the peccant part. Pope

Though every human constitution is morbid, yet are there diseases consistent with the common functions of life. Arbuthnot

FUND, n. f. [fund, French; funder, a bag, Latin.]
1. Stock; capital; that by which any expence is supported.

He touches the passions more delicately than Ovid, and performs all this out of his own fund, without diving into the arts and sciences for a supply. Dryden

Part must be left, a fund when foes invade,
And part employ'd to roll the wat'ry tide. Dryden.
In preaching, no men succeed better than those who trust entirely to the flock or fund of their own reason, advanced indeed, but not overlaid by commerce with books. Swift.

2. Stock or bank of money.
As my estate has been hitherto either tost upon seas, or fluctuating in funds, it is now fixed in substantial acres. Add.
FUNDAMENT. n. f. [fundamentum, Latin.] The back part of the body.

FUNDAMENTAL. adj. [fundamentalis, Lat. from fundament.] Serving for the foundation; that upon which the rest is built; essential; important; not merely accidental.

Until this can be agreed upon, one main and fundamental cause of the most grievous war is not like to be taken from the earth. Raleigh.

You that will be left fearful than discreet,
That love the fundamental part of state,
More than you doubt the charge of it. Shakespeare.
Others, when they were brought to allow the throne vacant, thought the succession should go to the next heir, according to the fundamental laws of the kingdom, as if the last king were actually dead. Swift.

Gain some general and fundamental truths, both in philosophy, in religion, and in human life. Watts.

Such we find they are, as can controul
The servile actions of our wav'ring soul;
Can fright, can alter, or can chain the will;
Their ills all built on life, that fundamental ill. Prior.

Yet some there were among the founder few,
Of those who less presum'd, and better knew,
Who durst assert the juster ancient laws,
And here restor'd wit's fundamental laws. Pope.

FUNDAMENTAL. n. f. Leading proposition; important and essential part which is the ground work of the rest.

We will propose the question, whether those who hold the fundamentals of faith may deny Christ damnably, in respect of those superstructures and consequences that arise from them. South's Serment.

It is a very just reproach, that there should be so much violence and hatred in religious matters among men who agree in all fundamentals, and only differ in some ceremonies, or mere speculative points. Swift.

FUNDAMENTALLY. adv. [from fundamental.] Essentially; originally.

As virtue is seated fundamentally in the intellect, so perfectly in the fancy; so that virtue is the force of reason, in the conduct of our actions and passions to a good end. Grew.

Religion is not only useful to civil society, but fundamentally necessary to its very birth and constitution. Bentley.

The unlimited power placed fundamentally in the body of a people, the legislators endeavour to deposit in such hands as would preserve the people. Swift.

FUNERAL. n. f. [funus, Latin; funerales, French.]

1. The solemnization of a burial; the payment of the last honours to the dead; obsequies.

Here, under leave of Brutus, and the rest,
Come I to speak in Cæsar's funeral. Shakespeare.

All things that we ordained festival,
Turn from their office to black funeral. Shakespeare.
He that had cast out many unburied, had none to mourn for him, nor any solemn funerals, nor sepulchre with his fathers. 2 Macc.

No widow at his funeral shall weep. Sandy.

2. The pomp or procession with which the dead are carried.

The long funerals blacken all the way. Pope.
You are sometimes desirous to see a funeral pass by in the street. Swift.

3. Burial; interment.

May he find his funeral
In th' sands, when he before his day shall fall. Denham.

FUNERAL. adj. Used at the ceremony of interring the dead.

Our instruments to melancholy bells,
Our wedding cheer to a sad funeral feast. Shakespeare.

Let such honours
And funeral rites, as to his birth and virtues
Are due, be first perform'd. Denham.

Thy hand o'er towns the funeral torch displays,
And forms a thousand ills ten thousand ways. Dryden.

FUNERAL. adj. [funera, Latin.] Suiting a funeral; dark; dismal.

But if his soul hath wing'd the deslin'd flight,
Inhabitant of deep disastrous night,
Homeward with pious speed repairs the main,
To the pale shade funeral rites ordain. Pope.

FUNGOSITY. n. f. [from fungus.] Unfold excrecence. Did.

FUNGUS. adj. [from fungus.] Excrecent; spongy; wanting firmness.

It is often employed to keep down the fungus lips that spread upon the bone; but it is much more painful than the echarotic medicines. Sharp.

FUNGUS. n. f. [Latin.] Strictly a mushroom: a word used to express such excrecences of flesh as grow but upon the lips of wounds, or any other excrecence from trees or plants not naturally belonging to them; as the agaric from the larch-tree, and auricular juda from elder. Quincy.

The furgeon ought to vary the diet as the fibres lengthen too much, are too fluid, and produce funguses, or as they harden and produce collicities. Arbutnot.

FUNICLE. n. f. [funiculus, Latin.] A small cord; a small ligature; a fibre.

FUNICULAR. adj. [funiculaire, Fr. from funicle.] Consisting of a small cord or fibre.

FUNK. n. f. A stink. A low word.

FUNNEL. n. f. [infundibulum, Latin; whence fundible, fundle, funnel.]

1. An inverted hollow cone with a pipe descending from it, through which liquours are poured into vessels with narrow mouths; a tundish.

If you pour a glut of water upon a bottle, it receives little of it; but with a funnel, and by degrees, you shall fill many of them. Ben. Johnson.

Some the long funnel's curious mouth extend,
Through which ingel'd meats with ease descend. Black.

The outward ear or auricula is made hollow, and contracted by degrees, to draw the sound inward, to take in as much as may be of it, as we use a funnel to pour liquor into any vessel. Ray.

2. A pipe or passage of communication.

Towards the middle are two large funnels, bored through the roof of the grotto, to let in light or fresh air. Addison.

FUR. n. f. [fourrures, French.]

1. Skin with soft hair with which garments are lined for warmth, or covered for ornament.

December must be expell'd with a horrid and fearful countenance; as also at his back a bundle of holly, holding in fur mittens the sign of Capricorn. Peabam.

 thence a stormy, turbulent, violent, raging woman.
 The fight of any of the house of York,
 Is as a fury to torment my foul. Shakespeare.

- It was the most proper place for a fury to make her exit; and I believe every reader's imagination is pleas'd, when he sees the angry goddess thus sinking in a tempest, and plunging herself into hell, amidst such a scene of horror and confusion. Adolfen.
- FURZE. n. f. [furr, Saxon.] Gorse; gofs.
 The whole plant is very thorny: the flowers, which are of the pea-bloom kind, are disposed in short thick spikes, which are succeeded by short compressed pods, in each of which are contained three or four kidney-shaped seeds. The species are three, each of which grow wild on the heaths and upland-commons in England: the first is sometimes used to make hedges, for which purpose it will do very well for a few years. Miller.

 clock or watch.
 The reason of the motion of the balance is by the motion of the next wheel, and that by the motion of the next, and that by the motion of the fusee, and that by the motion of the spring: the whole frame of the watch carries a reasonableness in it, the passive impression of the intellectual idea that was in the artist. Hale.
 2. A firelock [from fusil, Fr.] a small neat musquet. This is more properly written fusil.
 FUSKE of a bomb or granado shell, is that which makes the whole powder or composition in the shell take fire, to do the designed execution. 'Tis usually a wooden pipe or tap filled with wildfire, or some such matter; and is intended to burn no longer than is the time of the motion of the bomb from the mouth of the mortar to the place where it is to fall, which time Anderson makes twenty-seven seconds. Harris.

Nor will you raise in me combustion,
By dint of high heroic fustian. Hudibras.

What fustian have I heard these gentlemen find out in Mr. Cowley's odes! In general, I will say, that nothing can appear more beautiful to me than the strength of those images which they condemn. Dryden.

I am much deceived if this be not abominable fustian; that is, thoughts and words ill sorted, and without the least relation to each other. Dryden.

Chance thoughts, when govern'd by the clove,
Oft rise to fustian, or descend to profe. Smith.

FUSTIAN. adj. [from the noun]

1. Made of fustian.
2. Fustian; unnaturally pompous; ridiculously tumid. Used of style.

When men argue, th' greatest part
O' th' contest falls on terms of art,
Until the fustian stuff be spent,
And then they fall to th' argument. Hudibras.

Virgil, if he could have seen the first verses of the Sylva, would have thought Statius mad in his fustian description of the statue on the brazen horse. Dryden.

To future men, and in their dwellings peace. Milton.

He sows the seeds at Pallas's command,
And sings the future people from his hand. Milton.

FUTURE. n. f. [from the adjective.] Time to come; that which will happen hereafter.

Thy letters have transported me beyond
This ignorant present time; and I feel now
The future in the instant. Shakespeare.

The mind, once jaded by an attempt above its power, either is disabled for the future, or else checks at any rigorous undertaking ever after. Locke.

FUTURELY. adv. [from future.] In time to come.

This prescience of God, as it is prescience, is not the cause of any thing futurely succeeding; neither doth God's knowledge impose any necessity, or bind. Keble.

FUTURITION. n. f. [from future.] The state of being to be; of being to come to pass hereafter.

Is it imaginable, that the great means of the world's redemption should rest only in the number of possibilities, and hang to loose in respect of its futurition, as to leave the event in an equal poise, whether ever there should be such a thing or no? South.

FUTURITY. n. f. [from future.]

1. Time to come; events to come.

Not my service path, nor present sorrows,
Nor purpos'd merit in futurity,
Can ransom me. Shakespeare.

All futurities are naked before that All-seeing Eye, the sight of which is no more hindered by distance of time than the sight of an angel can be determined by distance of place. South.

I will contrive some way to make it known to futurity, that I had your lordship for my patron.

This, great Amphiarus, lay hid from thee,
Though skill'd in fate and dark futurity. Pope.

2. The state of being to be; futurition.

And fy on fortune, mine avowed foe,
Whose wrathful wrecks themselves do now ally. Spenser.

Fy, my lord, fy! a soldier, and afraid? What need we fear who knows it, when none can call our power to account? Shakespeare.

A bawd, sir, fy upon him!

But fy, my wand'ring muse, how thou do'st fly!
Expectance calls thee now another way. Milton.

Nay, fy, what mean you in this open place?
Unhand me, or, I swear, I'll scratch your face:

Let go, for shame; you make me mad for spite:
My mouth's my own; and if you kiss, I'll bite. Drum.

Fy, madam, he cried, we must be past all these games. Farmer.

G.

G A D

G A G

G Has two sounds, one from the Greek Γ, and the Latin, which is called that of the hard G, because it is formed by a pressure somewhat hard of the forepart of the tongue against the upper gum. This sound G retains before a, e, u, i, r, s as, gate, go, gull. The other sound, called that of the soft G, resembles that of g, and is commonly, though not always, found before e, i as, gem, gibel. Before n, at the end of a word, g is commonly melted away; as in the French, from which these words are commonly derived: thus, for beignin, malign, condign, we pronounce beigne, maline, condine. It is often silent in the middle of words before b, s as, might. The Saxon E, z, seems to have had generally the sound of y consonant; whence gate is by rusticks still pronounced yate.

GABARDINE. v. n. [gavardina, Italian.] A coarse frock; any mean dress.

My best way is to creep under his gabardine; there is no other shelter hereabout. Shakespeare.

You call me misbeliever, cut-throat dog, And spit upon my Jewish gabardine. Shakespeare.

The knight did straight submit,

And laid his weapons at her feet:

Next he disrob'd his gabardine,

And with it did himself resign. Hudibras.

GABAZEL. v. n. [gabazere, Italian; gabberen, Dutch.]

1. To make an articulate noise.

When thou could'st not, savage,

Shew thine own meaning, but would'st gabble like

A thing most brutish, I endow'd thy purposes

With words that made them known. Shakespeare.

Flocks of fowl, that when the tempests roar,

With their hoarse gabbling seek the silent shoar. Dryden.

2. To prate loudly without meaning.

Have you no wit, manners, nor honesty, but to gabble like tinkers at this time of night? Do ye make an alchouse of my lady's house! Shakespeare.

Which made some think, when he did gabble,

Th' had heard three labourers of Babel. Hudibras.

Such a rout, and such a rabble,

Run to hear Jack Pudding gabble. Swift.

GABBLE. n. f. [from gab.]

1. Inarticulate noise like that of brute animals.

Not to know what we speak one to another, so we seem to know, is to know straight our purpose: chough's language, gabb's enough, and good enough. Shakespeare.

2. Loud talk without meaning.

Forthwith a hideous gabble rises loud

Among the builders; each to other calls,

Not understood. Milton.

GABBER. n. f. [from gabble.] A prater; a chattering fellow.

GABEL. n. f. [gabelle, French; gabellu, Italian; gafel, Saxon, a tribute.] An excise; a tax.

The gabels of Naples are very high on oil, wine, and tobacco. Addison.

GABION. n. f. [French.] A wicker basket which is filled with earth to make a fortification or intrenchment.

His battery was defended all along with gabions, and casks filled with sand. Kneller.

GABELE. n. f. [gavale, Welsh; gabelle, French.] The sloping roof of a building.

Take care that all your brick-work be covered with the tiling, according to the new way of building, without gable ends, which are very heavy, and very apt to let the water into the brick-work. Mortimer.

GAD. n. f. [gao, Saxon; gadder, Islandick, a club.]

1. A wedge or ingot of steel.

Flemish steel is brought down the Rhine to Dort, and other parts of Holland and Flanders, some in bars, and some in gads; and therefore called Flemish steel, and sometimes gad steel. Alexan's Mech. Exerc.

2. It seems to be used by Shakespeare for a stile or graver, [from gao, Saxon, a goad.]

Nº LX.

I will go get a leaf of brasi,

And with a gad of steel will write these words. Shakespeare.

GAD. v. n. [Derived by Stinner from gadfy; by Junius from gadow, Welsh, to forsake.] To ramble about without any settled purpose; to rove loosely and idly.

How now, my headstrong, where have you been gadding?

—Where I have learnt me to repent. Shakespeare.

Give the water no passage, neither a wicked woman liberty to gad abroad. Ecclesi. xxv. 25.

The lesser devils arose with ghastly rore,

And thronged forth about the world to gad;

Each land they fished, river, stream and shore. Fairfax.

Envy is a gadding passion, and walketh the streets, and doth not keep home. Bacon.

Gad not abroad at ev'ry quest and call

Of an untrained hope or passion;

To court each place or fortune that doth fall,

Is wantonness in contemplation. Herbert.

Thence, shepherd, thee the woods and desert caves,

With wild thyme and the gadding vine o'ergrown,

And all their echo's moan. Milton.

A fierce loud buzzing breeze; their flings draw blood,

And drive the cattle gadding through the wood. Dryden.

She wreaks her anger on her rival's head;

With furies frights her from her native home,

And drives her gadding, round the world to roam. Dryden.

Gull 'em with freedom,

And you shall see 'em tofs their tails, and gad

As if the breeze had flung them. Dryden and Lee.

There's an ox loist, and this cockcomb runs a gadding after wild fowl. L'Estrange.

No wonder their thoughts should be perpetually shifting from what disgusts them, and seek better entertainment in more pleasing objects, after which they will unavoidably be gadding. Locke.

GADDER. n. f. [from gad.] A rambler; one that runs much abroad without business.

A drunken woman, and a gadder abroad, causeth great anger, and she will not cover her own shame. Ecclesi. xxvi. 8.

GADGINGLY. adv. [from gad.] In a rambling, roving manner.

GADFLY. n. f. [gad and fly; but by Stinner, who makes it the original of gad, gadfly. Supposed to be originally from goad, in Saxon gao, and fly.] A fly that when he stings the cattle makes them gad or run madly about; the breeze.

The fly called the gadfly breedeth of somewhat that swim-meth upon the top of the water, and is most about ponds. Bacon.

Light fly his slumbers, if perchance a slight

Of angry gadflies fallen on the head. Thomson.

GAFF. n. f. A harpoon or large hook. Anglo-sax.

GAFFER. n. f. [gafere, companion, Saxon.] A word of respect, now obsolete, or applied only in contempt to a mean person.

For gaffer Treadwell told us by the bye,

Excellent sorrow is exceeding dry. Gay.

GAFFLES. n. f. [gafclup, spears, Saxon.]

1. Artificial spurs put upon cocks when they are set to fight.

2. A steel contrivance to bend cross-bows. Ainsworth.

GAG. v. n. [from gagel, Dutch, the palate, Minnew] To stop the mouth with something that may allow to breathe, but hinder to speak.

He's out of his guard already: unless you laugh and minister occasion to him, he is gagg'd. Shakespeare.

There foam'd rebellious logick, gagg'd and bound. Pope.

GAG. n. f. [from the verb.] Something put into the mouth to hinder speech or eating.

Some, when the kids their dams too deeply drain,

With gags and muzzles their four mouths restrain. Dryden.

Your woman would have run up stairs before me; but I have forc'd her below with a gag in her chaps. Dryden.

GAGE. n. f. [gage, French.] A pledge; a pawn; a caution; any thing given in security.

Who, when the shamed shield of slain Sensory
He spy'd, with that same fairy champion's page,
He to him leapt; and that same envious gage,
Of victor's glory, from him snatcht away.

Spenser.

There I throw my gage,
Disclaiming here the kindred of a king,
And lay aside my high blood's royalty. Shakespeare.
There is my gage, the manual seal of death,
That marks thee out for hell. Shakespeare.
They from their mothers' breasts poor orphans rend,
Nor without gages to the needy lend. Sandys.

I am made the cautionary pledge,
The gage and hostage of your keeping it. Scutcheon.
But since it was decreed, auspicious kings,
In Britain's right that thou should'st wed the main,
Heav'n, as a gage, would call me previous thing,
And therefore doom'd that Lawton should be slain. Dryden.
In any truth, that gets not possession of our minds by self-evidence or demonstration, the arguments, that gain it assent, are the vouchers and gage of its probability. Locke.

To GAGE, v. a. [gager, French.]

1. To wager; to depose as a wager; to impawn; to give as a caution, pledge, or security.

Against the which, a moiety competent
Was gaged by our king. Shakespeare.
Drawing near the shore, he found the Turkish merchants making merry upon the main: unto these merchants he gave due salutations, gaging his faith for their safety, and they likewise to him. Kneller.

2. To measure; to take the contents of any vessel of liquids particularly. More properly gauge. See GAUGE.

We shall see your bearing.
—Nay, but I har to-night: you shall not gage me
By what we do to-night. Shakespeare.

To GAUGLE, v. n. [gagen, gaelen, Dutch.] To make noise like a goose.

Birds prune their feathers, geese gaggle, and crows seem to call upon rain; which is but the comfort they receive in the relenting of the air. Bacon.

May fat geese gaggle with melodious voice,
And ne'er want gooseberries or apple-sauce. King.

GAILETY. See GAIETY.

GAILY, adv. [from gay.]

1. Airily; cheerfully.
2. Splendidly; pompously; with great show.
The ladies gaily dress'd, the Mall adorn
With curious dyes, and paint the sunny morn.
Like some fair flow'r that early Spring supplies,
That gaily blooms, but ev'n in blooming dies. Pope.

GAIN, n. f. [gain, French.]

1. Profit; advantage.
But what things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ. Phil. iii. 7.

Besides the purpose it were now, to teach how victory should be used, or the gains thereof communicated to the general content. Kaligh.

It is in praise of men as in gettings and gains; for light gains make heavy purses; for light gains come thick, whereas great come but now and then. Bacon.

This must be made by some governor upon his own private account, who has a great flock that he is content to turn that way, and is invited by the gains. Temple.

2. Interest; lucrative views.
That, fir, which serves for gain,
And follows but for form,
Will pack, when it begins to rain,
And leave thee in the storm. Shakespeare.

3. Unlawful advantage.
Did I make a gain of you by any of them whom I lent unto you? 2 Cor. xii. 17.
4. Overplus in a comparative computation; any thing opposed to loss.

To GAIN, v. a. [gagner, French.]

1. To obtain as profit or advantage.
Thou hast taken usury and increase, and thou hast greedily gained of thy neighbours by extortions. Ezek. xxii. 12.

2. To have the overplus in comparative computation.
If you have two vessels to fill, and you empty one to fill the other, you gain nothing by that. Burnet.

3. To obtain; to procure.
If such a tradition were endeavour'd to be set on foot, it is not easy to imagine how it should at first gain entertainment;
but much more difficult to conceive how ever it should come to be universally propagated. Tillotson.

4. To obtain increase of any thing allotted.
I know that ye would gain the time, because ye see the king is gone from me. Dan. ii. 8.

5. To obtain whatever good or bad.
Ye should not have loosed from Crete, and have gained this harm and loss. Acts xxvii. 21.

6. To win.

They who were sent to the other pass, after a short rest, ance, gained it. Clarinda.

Fat fees from the defended Umbrian draw,
And only gain the wealthy client's caule. Dryden.

O love! for Sylvia let me gain the prize,
And make my tongue victorious as her eyes. Pope.

7. To draw into any interest or party.
Come, with presents, laden from the port,
To gratify the queen and gain the court. Dryden.

If Pyrrhus must be wrought to ply,
No woman does it better than yourself:
If you gain him, I shall comply of course. A. Plautus.

8. To reach; to attain.
The West glimmers with some streaks of day:
Now issues the lated traveller apace,
To gain the timely inn. Shakespeare.

Death was the post, which I almost did gain:
Shall I once more be told into the main?
We came to the roots of the mountains, and had a very troublesome march to gain the top of it. Waller.

Thus sav'd from death, they gain the Persian fleet;
With shattered vessels and disabled oars. Pope.

9. To GAIN over. To draw to another party or interest.
The court of Hanover should have endeavour'd to gain over those who were represented as their enemies. English.

To GAIN, v. n.
1. To encroach; to come forward by degrees.
When watchful herons leave their wat'ry stand,
And mounting upward with erected flight,
Gain on the skies, and soar above the light. Dryden.

On the land while here the ocean gains,
In other parts it leaves wide fandy pains. Pope.

2. To get ground; to prevail against.
The English have not only gained upon the Venetians in the Levant, but have their cloth in Venice sold. Bayle.

3. To obtain influence with.
My good behaviour had gained so far on the emperor, that I began to conceive hopes of liberty. Galley.

To GAIN, v. n. To grow rich; to live advantage; to be advanced in interest or happiness.

GAIN, adj. [An old word now out of use.] Handy, ready;
dexterous.

GA'INER, n. f. [from gain.] One who receives profit or advantage.

The client, besides retaining a good conscience, is then a gainer, and by no means can be at any loss, as being, as the composition be overhurd, he may relieve himself by accusation to his oath. Bacon.

If what I get in empire
I lose in fame, I think myself no gainer. Devlin.
He that loves any thing, and gets wisdom by it, is a gainer.
by the loss. Leibniz.

By extending a well regulated trade, we are as great gainers by the commodities of many other countries as those of our own nation. Adam Smith.

GAINFUL, adj. [from gain and full.]
1. Advantageous; profitable.

He will dazzle his eyes, and bait him in with the delicious proposal of some gainful purchase, some rich match, or advantageous project. Swift.

2. Lucrative; productive of money.
Nor knows he merchants gainful care. Dryden.

Ma'o's music,
Thrice sacred music! commodious precepts gives,
Instructive to the swains, not wholly bent
On what is gainful: sometimes she diverts
From solid counsels. Finch.

GA'INFULLY, adv. [from gainful.] Profitably; advantageously.

GA'INFULNESS, n. f. [from gainful.] Profit; advantage.

GA'INGIVING, n. f. [gaingif and give.] The act of en-giving; a giving against; as gaingiving, which is this in us, is saying against, or contradicting. Homer.

It is but foolery; but it is such a kind of gaingiving as would, perhaps, trouble a woman. Shakespeare.

GA'INGLESS, adj. [from gain.] Unprofitable; producing no advantage.

GA'INGLESSNESS, n. f. [from gainless.] Unprofitableness; want of advantage.

The parallel holds too in the gain of light as well as light- fulness of the work: those wretched creatures, buried in darkness and darkness, were never the richer for all the eye they dugged; no more is the insatiable miser. Dancy of Pope.

GAINLY, adv. [from gain.] Handily; readily; dexterously.

To GA'INSAY, v. a. [gaingif and joy.]
1. To contradict; to oppose; to contravert with; to disparage again. Waller.

Speeches which gain say one another, must of necessity be applied both unto one and the same subject.
Too facile then, thou didst not much gain say;
Nay, didst permit, approve, and laud diluents. Milton.

2. To deny any thing. 1 Peter.

I never heard yet

That any of those bolder vices wanted
Lest impudence to gain ay what they did,
Than to perform it first.

Shakespeare.

GAINSAVER. n. f. [from gain + say.] Opponent; adversary.
Such as may vainly gainsayers, when suddenly, and besides expectation, they require the fame at our hands. Hooker.

We are, for this cause, challenged as manifest gainsayers of Scripture, even in that which we read for Scripture unto the people. Hooker.

It was full matter of conviction to all gainsayers. Hammond.

GAINST. prep. [for against.] See AGAINST.

Tremble, ye nations! who, secure before,
Laugh'd at those arms, that gainst ourselves we bore. Dry.
GAINSTAND. v. a. [gainst and stand.] To withstand; to oppose; to resist.

Love proved himself valiant, that durst with the sword of reverent duty gainstand the force of so many enraged de-fires. Sidney.

GATRISH. adj. [geappian, to die; fine, Saxon.]

1. Gaudy; showy; splendid; fine.

I call'd thee then poor shadow, painted queen,
The presentation of but what I was;
A mother, only mock'd with two fair babes;
A dream of what thou wast, a gairish flag,
To be the aim of every dangerous shot. Shakespeare.
There in close covert by some brook,
Where no profane eye may look,
Hide me from day's gairish eye. Milton.

2. Extravagantly gay; flighty.
Fame and glory transports a man out of himself: it makes the mind loose and gairish, scatters the spirits, and leaves a kind of dissolution upon the faculties. South.

GATRISHNESS. n. f. [from gairish.]
1. Idleness; flaunting gaieties.

2. Flighty or extravagant joy.
Let your hope be without vanity, or gairishness of spirit, but sober, grave and silent. Taylor.

GAIT. n. f. [gat, Dutch]

1. A way; as, gang your gait.
Good youth, address thy gait unto her;
Be not denied access, stand at her door. Shakespeare.

2. March; walk.

Nought regarding, they kept on their gait,
And all her vain allurements did forsake.
Thou art so lean and meagre waxen late,
That scarce thy legs uphold thy feeble gait. Spenser.
3. The manner and air of walking.

Great Juno comes; I know her by her gait. Shakespeare.
He had in his person, in his aspect, the appearance of a great man, which he preferred in his gait and motion. Clar.

A third, who, by his gait
And fierce demeanour, seems the prince of hell. Milton.

Wallowing, unwieldy, enormous in their gait. Milton.

I describ'd his way,
Pent all on speed, and mark'd his airy gait. Milton.

GALAGE. n. f. A shepherd's clog.
My heart-blood is well nigh frore, I feel;
And my galage grown fast to my heel. Spenser.

GALANGAL. n. f. [galange, French.] A medicinal root, of which there are two species. The lesser galangal is in pieces, about an inch or two long, of the thickness of a man's little finger; a brownish red colour, extremely hot and pungent. The larger galangal is in pieces, about two inches or more in length, and an inch in thickness; its colour is brown, with a faint cast of red in it: it has a disagreeable, but much less acid and pungent taste than the smaller sort. They are both brought from the East-Indies; the small kind from China, and the larger from the island of Java, wherewith the people, while it is fresh, by way of spice, season their dishes. The small sort is used with us in medicine as a stomachick, and is an ingredient in almost all bitter infusions and mixtures. Hill.

GALAXY. n. f. [γαλαξίας; galaxie, Fr.] The milky way; a stream of light in the sky.

A broad and ample road, whose dust is gold,
And pavement stars, as stars to these appear,
Seen in the galaxy. Milton.

A brown, for which heaven would disband
The galaxy, and stars be caus'd. Cleveland.

Men doubt, because they stand so thick i' th' sky,
If those be stars that paint the galaxy. Cowley.

We dare not undertake to shew what advantage is brought to us by those innumerable stars in the galaxy. Bentley.

GALBENUM. n. f.
We meet with galbanum sometimes in loose granules, called drops or tears, which is the purest, and sometimes in large masses. It is soft, like wax, and ductile between the fingers; of a yellowish or reddish colour: its smell is strong and disagreeable: its taste acid, nauseous and bitterish. It is of a mild nature between a gum and a resin, being inflammable

as a resin, and soluble in water as a gum, and will not dissolve in oil as pure resins do. It is the produce of an umbelliferous plant, whose stalks are about an inch thick, and five or six feet high: its leaves are like the common anise, of a strong smell, and acid taste; but the flowers, and especially the seeds, much more so. The whole plant abounds with a viscous milky juice, which it yields when wounded, and which soon concretes into substance called galbanum. The plant is frequent in Persia, and in many parts of Africa. Its medicinal virtues are considerable in asthma, coughs, and hysteric complaints. Hill.

I yielded indeed a pleasant odour, like the best myrrh; as galbanum. Ecluse.

GALE. n. f. [galling, halcy, sudden, German.] A wind not tempestuous, yet stronger than a breeze.

What happy gale
Blows you to Padua here, from old Verona? Shakespeare.

Of gentlest gale Arabian odours fann'd
From their soft winds, and Flora's earliest smells. Milton.

Fresh gales and gentle air.
Umbria's green retreats, Addison.
Where western gales eternally reside.

GALLEAS. n. f. [galeas, French.] A heavy low-built vessel, with both sails and oars. It carries three masts, but they cannot be lowered, as in a galley. It has thirty-two seats for rowers, and six or seven slaves to each. They carry three tires of guns at the head, and at the stern there are two tires of guns. DiD.

The Venetians pretend they could get out, in case of great necessity, thirty men of war, a hundred galleys, and ten es-cadrés. Addison.

GALLEATED. adj. [galatus, Latin.]

1. Covered as with a helmet.

A galated cichinus, copped, and in shape somewhat more comick than any of the foregoing. Wadsworth.

2. [In botany.] Such plants as bear a flower resembling an helmet, as the monkshood.

GALERICULATE. adj. [from galerus, Latin.] Covered as with a hat.

GALLIOT. n. f. [galiste, French.] A little galley or sort of brigantine, built very light and fit for chase. It carries but one mast, and two or three paterences. It can both sail and row, and has sixteen or twenty seats for the rowers, with row man to each oar. DiD.

Barbarossa sent before him Dragut and Corsetus, two notable pyrates, with thirty galists, who, landing their men, were valiantly encountered by Sarnienus, and forced again to their galists. Amel.

GALL. n. f. [gala, Saxon; galie, Dutch.]

1. The bile; an animal juice remarkable for its sapped bitterness.

Come to my woman's breast,
And take my milk for gall, you murr'n'g ministers! Shak.

A honey tongue, a heart of gall,
Is fancy's spring, but sorrow's fall. Shakespeare.

It drew from my heart all love,
And added to the gall. Shakespeare.

This position informs us of a vulgar error, turning the gall bitter, as their proverb more pertinently implies, it's as bitter as gall; whereas there's nothing gallable sweet; and what is most unctuous must needs partake of a sweeter flavour.

Harvey on Consumption.
Gall is the greatest solvent of curdled milk: Boerhaave has given at a time one drop of the gall of an eel with succus. Artibout.

3. The part which contains the bile.

The married couple, as a testimony of future concord, did cast the gall of the sacrifice between the altar. Brown.

3. Any thing extremely bitter.

Thither write, my queen,
And with mine eyes I'll drink the words you send,
Though ink be made of gall. Shakespeare.

Poison be their drink!
Gall, worse than gall, the daintiest meat they taste! Shakespeare.

She still insults, and you must still adore;
Grant that the honey's much, the gall is more. Dryden.

4. Rancour; malignity.
They did great hurt unto his title, and have left a perpetual gall in the mind of the people. Spenser.

5. A slight hurt by fretting of the skin. [From the verb.]
This is the fatallest wound of the tongue, carries least smart, but infinitely more of danger; and is as much superior to the former, as a gangrene is to a gall or scorch: this may be fore-and vexing, but that stupifying and deadening.

6. Anger; bitterness of mind.
Suppose your hero were a lover,
Though he before had gall and rage;
He grows dispirited and low,
He hates the fight, and shuns the blow. Prior.

7. [From galla.]

Galls or galnuts are a kind of preternatural and accidental tumours, produced on various trees; but those of the oak only are used in medicine. We have two kinds, the Oriental and the European galls: the Oriental are brought from Aleppo, of the bigness of a large nutmeg, with tubercles on their surface, of a very firm and solid texture, and a disagreeable, acerb, and astringent taste. The European galls are of the same size, with perfectly smooth surfaces: they are light, often spongy, and cavernous within, and always of a lax texture. They have a less austere taste, and are of much less value than the first sort, both in manufactures and medicine. The general history of galls is this: an insect of the fly kind, for the safety of her young, wounds the branches of the trees, and in the hole deposits her egg; the lacerated vessels of the tree discharging their contents, form a tumour or woody case about the hole, where the egg is thus defended from all injuries. This tumour also serves for the food of the tender maggot, produced from the egg of the fly, which, as soon as it is perfect, and in its winged state, gnaws its way out, as appears from the hole found in the gall; and where no hole is seen on its surface, the maggot, or its remains, are sure to be found within, on breaking it. It has been observed, that the oak does not produce galls in cold countries: but this observation should be confined to the medicinal galls; for all those excrescences which we find on this tree in our own woods, and call oak-apples, oak-grapes, and oak-cones, are true and genuine galls, though less firm in their texture. The true reason of the hard ones not being produced with us, seems to be that we want the peculiar species of insect to which they owe their origin, which is a fly of the ichneumon kind, only found in hot countries. The species of fly that occasions, by its punctures, the soft galls of France and Italy, is different both from the Syrian one and from ours, though still of the ichneumon kind; and we find the several kinds, which occasion the different galls in our own kingdom, produce different kinds, and those of different degrees of hardness, on the same tree. Galls are used in making ink, and in dying and dressing leather and many other manufactures. In medicine they are very astringent, and good under proper management. Hist.

Besides the acorns, the oak beareth galls, oak-apples, and oak-nuts. Bacon.

Malpighi, in his treatise of galls, under which name he comprehends all preternatural and morbose excrescences, demonstrates that all such excrescences, where any insects are found, are excited by some venenous liquor, which, together with their eggs such insects shed. Ray.

The Aleppo galls, wherewith we make ink, are no other than cases of insects, which are bred in them. Debenham.

To GALL v. a. [galer, French.]

1. To hurt by fretting the skin.

I'll touch my point

With this contagion, that, if I gall him slightly,

It may be death. Shakespeare.

His yoke is easy, when by us embraed;

But loads and galls, if on our neck 'tis cast. Denham.

A carrier, when he would think of a remedy for his galled horie, begins with calling his eye upon all things. Locke.

On the monarch's speech Achilles broke,

And furious thus, and interrupting spoke;

Tyrant, I well deserv'd thy galling chain. Pope.

2. To impair; to wear away.

He doth object, I am too great of birth;

And that my fate being gall'd with my expence,

I seek to heal it only by his wealth. Shakespeare.

But gallip lively down the weſtern hill. Donne.

In ſuch a ſhape grim Saturn did refrain
His heav'nly limbs, and ſlow'd with ſuch a mane,
When half ſurpriz'd, and fearing to be ſeen,
The leacher gallip'd from his jealous queen. Dryden.

2. To ride at the pace which is performed by leaps.

Seeing ſuch flames of blood as threaten'd a drowning life,
we gallip'd toward them to part them. Sidney.

They 'gan eſpy
An armed knight towards them gallip' faſt,
That ſcem'd from ſome leaſed ſoe to fly. Spenser.

He who fair and loſhly goes ſteadily forward, in a couſe that points right, will ſooner be at his journey's end than he that runs after every one he meets, though he gallip all day full ſpeed. Locke.

3. To move very faſt.

The golden fun ſalutes the morn,
And, having gilt the ocean with his beams,
Gallip the zodiac in his glist'ring coach. Shakſpeare.

Whom doſt thou gal'p wiſh?
—With a thief to the gallows. Shakſpeare.

He that rides poſt through a country may, from the reſiſtent views, tell how in general the parts lie: ſuch ſuperficial ideas he may collect in gallioping over it. Locke.

GALLOP, n. f. [from the verb.] The motion of a horſe when he runs at full speed; in which, making a kind of a leap forwards, he lifts both his forelegs very near at the same time; and while there are in the air, and just upon the point of touching the ground, he lifts both his hindlegs almost at once.

Farrier's Dict.

G'ALLOPER. n. f. [from gallop.]

1. A horse that gallops.

Mules bred in cold countries are much better to ride than horses for their walk and trot; but they are commonly rough gallopers, though some of them are very fleet.

Mortimer.

2. A man that rides fast, or makes great haste.

G'ALLOWAY. n. f. A horse not more than fourteen hands high, much used in the North; probably as coming originally from Galloway, a shire in Scotland.

To G'ALLOW. v. a. [ægləfan, to fright, Saxon.] To terrify; to fright.

The wrathful skies
Gallow the very wand'ers of the dark,
And make them keep their caves.

Shakespeare.

G'ALLOWGLASSES. n. f.

1. It is worn then likewise of footmen under their shirts of mail, the which footmen call gallowglasses: the which name doth discover them also to be ancient English; for gallowglasse signifies an English fervitor or yeoman. And he being so armed in a long shirt of mail, down to the calf of his leg, with a long broad ax in his hand, was their pedes gravis armaturæ; and was instead of the footman that now weareth a corselet, before the corselet was used, or almost invented.

Spenser.

2. [Hanner, otherwise than Spenser.] Soldiers among the wild Irish, who serve on horseback.

A puissant and mighty pow'r

Of gallowglasse and stout kernes,

Is marching hitherward in proud array.

Shakespeare.

G'ALLOW. v. f. [It is used by some in the singular; but by G'ALLONS.] more only in the plural, or sometimes has another plural gallowes. Gallow, Gothic; gallow, Saxon; gallowe, Dutch; which some derive from gabulus, furca, Latin; others from gallow high; others from gallu, Welsh, power; but it is probably derived like gallowe, to fright, from ægləfan, the gallow being the great object of legal terror.]

1. A beam laid over two polls, on which malefactors are hanged. This monster fat like a hangman upon a pair of gallows: in his right hand he was painted holding a crown of laurel, in his left hand a purse of money.

Sidney.

I would we were all of one mind, and one mind good; O, there were desolation of gallows and gallowes.

Shakespeare.

I prophetic'd, if a gallow were on laud,

This fellow could not drown.

Shakespeare.

A little before dinner he took the major aside, and whispered him in the ear, that execution must that day be done in the town, and therefore required him that a pair of gallows should be erected.

Hoyward.

A production that naturally groweth under gallowes, and places of execution.

GAMBOGE. n. f.

Gamboge is a concreted vegetable juice, partly of a gummy, partly of a resinous nature. It is heavy, of a bright yellow colour, and scarce any smell. It is brought from America, and from many parts of the East Indies, particularly from Cambaja, or Cambogia, whence it has its name. Gamboge was not known in Europe 'till 1603, and soon after got into use as a purgative medicine; but the roughness of its operation rendering it less esteemed as such, it got into use in painting, where it yet retains its credit.

Hill.

To G'AMBL. v. n. [gambler, French.]

1. To dance; to skip; to frisk; to jump for joy; to play merry frolics.

Bears, tigers, ounces, pards,

Gambol'd before them.

Alfien.

Under the colour of his usual game,

He shall here find his friends with horse and men,

To let him free from his captivity. Shakspeare.

What arms to use, or nets to frame

Wild beasts to combat, or to tame,

With all the myst'ries of that game. Waller.

Some sportsmen, that were abroad upon game, find a company of buffaloes and cranes.

8. Animals pursued in the field; animals appropriated to legal sportsmen.

Hunting, and men, not beasts, shall be his game,

With war, and hostile snare, such as refuse

Submission to his empire tyrannous. Milton.

There is such a variety of game springing up before us, that I am distracted in my choice, and know not which to follow. Dryden.

A bloodhound will follow the track of the person he pursues, and all hounds the particular game they have in view.

Arbuthnot in Letters.

Go, with thy Cynthia hurl the pointed spear

At the rough bear, or chase the flying deer?

I and my Chiole take a nobler aim,

At human hearts we fling, nor ever miss the game. Prior.

Proud Nimrod first the bloody chase began

A mighty hunter, and his prey was man:

Our haughty Norman boasts that barb'rous name,

And makes his trembling slaves the royal game. Pope.

9. Solemn contests exhibited as spectacles to the people.

The games are done, and Cesar is returning. Shakspeare.

And was a common gamester to the camp. Shakespeare.

GA'MMER. n. f. [Of uncertain etymology; perhaps from grand mere, and therefore used commonly to old women.] The compellation of a woman corresponding to gaffer.

GA'MNONE. n. f. [gamnone, Italian.]

1. The buttock of an hog salted and dried; the lower end of the fitch.

Ask for what price this venal tongue was sold:

A rusty gammon of some few years old. Dryden.

Gammens, that have a relish to the taste,

And potted fowl, and fish, come in so fast,

That ere the first is out, the second stinks. Dryden.

2. A kind of play with dice.

The quick dice,

In thunder leaping from the box, awake

The founding gammon. Thomson.

GA'MUT. n. f. [gama, Italian.] The scale of musical notes.

Madam, before you touch the instrument,

To learn the order of my fingering,

I must begin with rudiments of art,

To teach you gamut in a briefer fort. Shakespeare.

When by the gamut some musicians make

A perfect song, others will undertake,

By the same gamut chang'd, to equal it:

Things simply good can never be unfit. Donne.

Long has a race of heroes fill'd the stage,

That rant by note, and through the gamut rage;

In songs and airs express their martial fire,

Combat in trills, and in a feuge expire. Addison.

'GAN, for begin, from gin for begin.

The noble knight 'gan feel

His vital force to faint. Spenser.

To GANCH. v. a. [ganciare, from gancio, a hook, Italian; ganche, French.] To drop from a high place upon hooks by way of punishment: a practice in Turkey, to which Smith alludes in his Poem.

As they have brewed, so let them bear the blame. Spenser.

Your flaunting beaus gang with their breasts open. Arbutnot.

GANG. n. f. [from the verb.] A number herding together; a troop; a company; a tribe; a herd. It is seldom used but in contempt or abhorrence.

Oh, you panderly rascals! there's a knot, gang, a pack, a conspiracy against me. Shakespeare.

As a gang of thieves were robbing a house, a multipl fell a barking. L'Estrange.

Admitted in among the gang,

He acts and talks as they befriend him. Prior.

GA'NGHON. [French.] A kind of flower. Sinsworth.

GANGLION. n. f. [γᾱγγλίον.] A tumour in the tendinous and nervous parts, proceeding from a fall or stroke. It relists, if stirred; if pressed upon the side, is not diverted, not can be turned round. Harris.

Bonefletters usually represent every bone dislocated, though possibly it be but a ganglion, or other crude tumour or preternatural protuberance of some part of a joint. Wifman.

GANGRENE. n. f. [gangrene, Fr. gangrena, Lat.] A mortification; a stoppage of circulation followed by putrefaction. This experiment may be transferred unto the cure of gangrenes, either coming of themselves, or induced by too much applying of opiates. Bacon.

She saves the lover, as we gangrenes stay,

By cutting hope, like a lapt limb, away. Waller.

A discolouring in the part was suppos'd an approach of a gangrene. Wifman.

If the substance of the soul is fettered with these passions, the gangrene is gone too far to be ever cured: the inflammation will rage to all eternity. Addison.

To GANGRENE. v. a. [gangrenar, French, from the noun.] To corrupt to mortification.

In cold countries, when men's noses and ears are mortified, and, as it were, gangrened with cold, if they come to a fire they rot out presently; for that the few spirits, that remain in those parts, are suddenly drawn forth, and so putrefaction is made complete. Bacon.

Gangren'd members must be lop'd away,

Before the nobler parts are tainted to decay. Dryden.

To GANGRENE. v. n. To become mortified.

My griefs not only pain me

As a ling'ring disease;

But finding no redress, ferment and rage,

Nor less than wounds immediate

Rankle and fester, and gangrene

To black mortification. Milton.

As phlegmons are subject to mortification, so also in fat bodies they are apt to gangrene after opening, if that fat be not speedily digested out. Wifman.

GA'NGRENOUS. adj. [from gangrenar.] Mortified; producing or betokening mortification.

The blood, turning acrimonious, corrodes the vessels, producing hæmorrhages, pustules red, lead-coloured, black and gangrenous. Arbutnot.

GA'NGWAY. n. f. In a ship, the several ways or passages from one part of it to the other. Diff.

GA'NGWEEK. n. f. [gang and week.] Rogation week, when processions are made to lustrate the bounds of parishes. Diff.

GA'NTLEPE. } n. f. [gantlet is only corrupted from gantelope,

GA'NTLET. } gant, all, and loopen, to run, Dutch.] A military punishment, in which the criminal running between the ranks receives a lash from each man.

But would'st thou, friend, who hast two legs alone,

Would'st thou to run the gantlet these expose,

To a whole company of hob-nail'd shoes? Dryden.

Young gentlemen are driven with a whip, to run the gantlet through the several classes. Lact.

GA'NZ. n. f. [ganza, Spanish, a goose.] A kind of wild goose, by a flock of which a virtuoso was fabled to be carried to the lunar world.

They are but idle dreams and fancies,

And favour strongly of the ganza's. Hudibras.

GAOL. n. f. [geol, Welsh; geole, French.] A prison; a place of confinement. It is always pronounced and too often written jail, and sometimes gaol.

Then am I the prisoner, and his bed my gaol. Shakespeare.

Have I been ever, and must my house

Be my retentive enemy, my gaol? Shakespeare.

If we mean to thrive and do good, break open the gaols, and let out the prisoners. Shakespeare.

GA'OLDELIVERY. n. f. [gaol and deliver.] The judicial process, which by condemnation or acquittal of persons confined evacuates the prison.

Then doth th' afflicting soul the body leave,

Which we call death; but were it known to all,

What life our souls do by this death receive,

Men would it birth or gaoldelivery call. Davies.

These make a general gaoldelivery of souls, not for punishment.

GA'OLER. n. f. [from gaol.] Keeper of a prison; he to whose care the prisoners are committed. Smith.

This is a gentle provolt; seldom, when
The fleeced gaster is the frigid of men.
I know not how or why my furly gaster,
Hard as his irons, and intolerant as pow'r
When put in vulgar hands, Cleanseth,
Put off the brute.

Shakespeare.

From the polite part of mankind he had been banished and immured, 'till the death of her gaster.

Dryden.

GAP, n. f. [from gape.]

Tatler.

1. An opening in a broken fence.

Behold the despair,
By custom and covetous pates,
By gaps and opening of gates.
With terrors and with furies to the bounds
And crystal wall of heav'n; which, opening wide,
Roll'd inward, and a spacious gap disclos'd
Into the wasteful deep.

Tulser.

Basties are moit laiting of any for dead hedges, or to mend gaps.

Mortimer.

I fought for a man, says God, that should make up the hedge, and stand in the gap before me, for the land that I flooded not destroy it.

Rogeri.

2. A breach.

The loss of that strong city concerned the Christian commonweal: manifold and lamentable miseries afterwards ensued by the opening of that gap, not unto the kingdom of Hungary only, but to all that side of Christendom.

Knollet.

3. A passage.

He's made master
O' th' rolls and the king's secretary: further
Stands in the gap, and treads for more preferment.
So stands the Thracian herdsman with his spear
Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear,
And hears him rustling in the wood.

Dryden.

4. An avenue; an open way.

The former kings of England passed into them a great part of their prerogatives; which though then it was well intended, and perhaps well deferred, yet now such a gap of mischief lies open thereby, that I could wish it were well stopp'd.

Spenser.

5. A hole; a deficiency.

If you violently proceed against him, mistaking his purpose, it would make a great gap in your honour.

Shakespeare.

Nor is it any butch or gap at all in the works of nature.

More's Antidote against Atheism.

6. Any interstice; a vacuity.

Each one demand, and answer to his part Perform'd in this wide gap of time, since first
We were dissolv'd.
That I might sleep out this great gap of time my Antony is away.

Shakespeare.

To make 'twixt words and lines huge gaps,

Wide as meridians in maps.
One can revive a languishing conversation by a sudden surprising sentence; another is more dexterous in seconding; a third can fill the gap with laughing.

Swift.

7. An opening of the mouth in speech during the pronunciation of two successive vowels.

The hiatus, or gap between two words, is caused by two vowels opening on each other.

8. To gap a GAP, is to escape by some mean shift: alluding to hedges mended with dead bushes, 'till the quickets will grow.

His policy, consists in setting traps,

In finding ways and means, and slipping gaps.

Swift.

GAP-TOTTERED, adj. [gap and teeth.] Having interstices between the teeth.

The reeve, miller, and cook, are distinguished from each other as much as the micing lady priorell and the broad-speaking gap-tottered wife of Bath.

Dryden.

TE GAPPE, v. n. [zeapan, Saxon.]

1. To open the mouth wide; to yawn.

Some men there are love not a gaping pig;
Some, that are mad, if they behold a gaper, Gaping or yawning, and flitching, do pass from man to man; for that causeth gapers and flitching is when the spirits are a little heavy by any vapour.

Atbanist.

She stretches, gapers, unglues her eyes,
And asks if it be time to rise.

Swift.

2. To open the mouth for food, as a young bird.

As callow birds,
Whose mother's kill'd in fecking of the prey,
Cry in their nest, and think her long away;
And at each leaf that stirs, each blait of wind,
Gape for the food which they must never find.
As in a drought the thirsty creatures cry,
And gape upon the gather'd clouds for rain,
Then first the market meets it in the sky,
And with wet wings joys all the feather'd train.

Dryden.

3. To desire earnestly; to crave.

To her grim death appears in all her shapes;
The hungry grave for her due tribute gapes.
To thy fortune be not thou a slave;
For what hast thou to fear beyond the grave?

Denham.

And thou, who gaps for my estate, draw near;
For I would whisper somewhat in thy ear.

Deben.

4. With after.

What shall we say of those who spend their days in gaping after court-favour and preferments?

L'Estrange.

5. With at.

Many have gaped at the church revenues; but, before they could swallow them, have had their mouths stopp'd in the church-yard.

Deben.

6. To open in fissures or holes.

If it assume my noble father's person,
I'll speak to it, though hell itself should gape,
And bid me hold my peace.

Shakespeare.

May that ground gape, and swallow me alive,
Where I shall kneel to him that slew my father.

Shakespeare.

The great horse-mulch, with the fine shell, doth gape and shut as the oysters do.

Deben.

The reception of one is as different from the admission of the other, as when the earth falls open under the iron of the plough, and when it gapes and greedily opens itself to the dew of heaven, or the refreshments of a shower.

Deben.

The mouth of a little artery and nerve gapes into the cavity of these vessels.

Deben.

7. To open with a breach.

The planks, their pitchy coverings with'd away,
Now yield, and now a yawning breach display:
The roaring waters, with a hostile tide,
Rush through the ruins of her gaping side.

Deben.

That all these actions can be performed by almost as well as medicines, is plain; by observing the effects of different substances upon the fluids and solids, when the vessels are open and gape by a wound.

Deben.

8. To open; to have an hiatus.

There is not, to the best of my remembrance, occurred gaping on another for want of a caesura in this whole poem.

Deben.

9. To make a noise with open throat.

And, if my muse can through past ages fly,
That noisy, nauseous, gaping fool is he.

Deben.

10. To flare with hope or expectation.

Others will gap 't anticipate
The cabinet designs of fate;
Apply to wizards, to foretell
What shall, and what shall never be.

Deben.

11. To flare with wonder.

Parts of different species jumbled together, according to the mad imagination of the dawner; and the end of all this cause laughter: a very monster in a Bartholomew fair, for the mob to gape at.

Deben.

Where elevated o'er the gaping crowd,
Clasp'd in the board the perjurd head is bow'd,
Betimes retreat.

Deben.

12. To flare irreverently.

They have gaped upon me with their mouths.

Deben.

GAPER, n. f. [from gape.]

1. One who opens his mouth.

2. One who flares foolishly.

3. One who longs or craves.

The golden shower of the dissolved abbey-lands rained well near into every gaper's mouth.

Deben.

GAP, n. Saxon, signifies a weapon: so Eufor is a gap weapon; Eufor, a noble weapon.

Deben.

TO GAR, v. a. [garra, Islandick.] To cause; to make it is still in use in Scotland.

Tell me, good Hobbinol, what gars thee great!

What! hath some wolf thy tender lambs ston'd?

Or is thy bagpipe broke, that sounds so sweet?

Or art thou of thy loved lads forsaken?

Deben.

GARB, n. f. [garber, French.]

1. Drefs; cloaths; habit.

Thus belial, with words cloath'd in reason's garb,
Council'd ignoble ease, and peaceful sloth.

Deben.

He puts himself into the garb and habit of a private physick, and sets up.

Deben.

2. Fashion of drefs.

Horace's wit, and Virgil's state,
He did not steal, but emulate;
And when he would like them appear,
Their garb, but not their cloaths, did wear.

Deben.

3. Exterior appearance.

This is some fellow,
Who, having been prais'd for bluntness, doth affect
A saucy roughness, and constrains the garb
Quite from his nature.

Deben.

GARBAGE, n. f. [garber, Spanish.] This etymology is not doubtful.

1. The bowels; the offal; that part of the inward which is separated and thrown away.

The cloyed will,

That satiate, yet unsatisfy'd desire, that tub

Deben.

Both fill'd and running, ravening first the lamb,

Longs after for the garbage.

Lust, though to a radiant angel link'd,

Will fate it still in a celestial bed,

And prey on garbage.

A flum more senseless than the rog'ry

Of old avarice and avarice.

That out of garbage of cattle

Prefag'd th' events of truce or battle.

Who, without aversion, ever look'd

On holy garbage, though by Homer cook'd? Roscommen.

When you receive condign punishment, you run to your confessor, that parcel of guts and garbage.

GARBEL. n. f. A plank next the keel of a ship.

GARBIDGE. n. f. Corrupted from garbage.

All thavings of horns, hoof of cattle, blood, and garbidge is good manure for land.

GARBISH. n. f. Corrupted from garbage.

In Newfoundland they improve their ground with the gar- bish of fish.

To GARBLE. v. a. [garbellare, Italian.] To sift; to part;

to separate the good from the bad.

But you who fathers and traditions take,

And garble some, and some you quite forsake.

Had our author set down this command without garbling, as God gave it, and joined mother to father, it had made directly against him.

The underfanding works to collate, combine, and garble

the images and ideas, the imagination and memory present to it.

GARBLES. n. f. [from garble.] He who separates one part from another.

A farther secret in this clause may best be discovered by the projectors, or at least the garblers of it.

GARBOL. n. f. [garboulis, French; garbuglio, Italian.] Dif-

order; tumult; uproar.

Look here, and at thy sovereign leisure read

What garbols the awak'd.

GARD. n. f. [gards, French.] Wardship; care; custody.

GARDEN. n. f. [gards, Welsh; jardins, French; giardini,

Italian.]

1. A piece of ground inclosed, and cultivated with extraordinary care, planted with herbs or fruits for food, or laid out for pleasure.

Thy promises are like Adonis' gardens,

Which one day bloom'd and fruitful were the next.

My lord of Ely, when I was last in Holbourn,

I saw good strawberries in your garden there.

In the royal ordering of gardens, there ought to be gardens for all the months in the year.

In every garden should be provided flowers, fruit, shade and water.

2. A place particularly fruitful or delightful.

I am arriv'd from fruitful Lombardy,

The pleasant garden of great Italy.

3. GARDEN is often used in composition for hortensis, or belonging to a garden.

GARDEN-MOULD. n. f. Mould fit for a garden.

Thy delight most in rich black garden-mould, that is deep and light, and mixed rather with sand than clay.

GARDEN-TILLAGE. n. f. Tillage used in cultivating gar- dens.

Peas and beans are what belong to garden tillage as well as that of the field.

GARDEN-WARE. n. f. The produce of gardens.

A clay bottom is a much more pernicious soil for trees and garden-ware than gravel.

To GARDEN. v. n. [from the noun.] To cultivate a garden;

to lay out gardens.

At first, in Rome's poor age,

When both her kings and consuls held the plough,

Or garden'd well.

When ages grow to civility and elegance, men come to build stately, sooner than to garden finely; as if gardening were the greater perfection.

GARDENER. n. f. [from garden.] He that attends or cultivates gardens.

Our bodies are our gardens, to the which our wills are gardeners; so that, if we will plant nettles, or sow lettuce, the power lies in our will.

Gardeners tread down any loose ground, after they have sown onions or turnips.

The gardener may top religion as he please.

The life and felicity of an excellent gardener is preferable to all other diversions.

Then let the learned gard'ner mark with care

The kinds of flocks, and what those kinds will bear.

GARDENING. n. f. [from garden.] The act of cultivating or planting gardens.

My compositions in gardening are after the Pindarick manner, and run into the beautiful wildness of nature, without GARE. n. f. Coarse wool growing on the legs of sheep. Spenser.

GARGARISM. n. f. [gargareus; gargarysm, French.] A liquid form of medicine to wash the mouth with.

Apoplegmatisms and gargarysm draw the rheum down by the palate.

To GARGARIZE. v. a. [gargareizo; gargaryzer, French.]

To wash the mouth with medicated liquors.

Vinegar, put to the nostrils, or gargarized, doth ease the hiccup; for that it is astringent, and inhibiteth the motion of the spirit.

This being relaxed, may make a shaking of the larynx;

as when we gargarize.

GARGET. n. f. A distemper in cattle.

The garget appears in the head, maw, or in the hinder parts.

To GARGLE. v. a. [garguiller, French; gargogliare, Ital.]

to gargle, German, the throat.]

1. To wash the throat with some liquor not suffered immediately to descend.

Gargle twice or thrice with sharp oxyerate.

The excision made, the bleeding will soon be stop'd by gar- gling with oxyerate.

They comb, and then they order ev'ry hair;

Next gargle well their throats.

2. To warble; to play in the throat. An improper use.

Those which only warble long

And garble in their throats a song.

So charm'd you were, you ceas'd a while to doat

On nonsense garbl'd in an enchanter's throat.

GARGLE. n. f. [from the verb.] A liquor with which the throat is washed.

His throat was washed with one of the gargles set down in the method of cure.

GARGOLION. n. f. An exudation of nervous juice from a bruise, or the like, which indurates into a hard immovable tumour.

GARGOL. n. f. A distemper in hogs.

The signs of the gargol in hogs are, hanging down of the head, moist eyes, staggering, and loss of appetite.

GARLAND. n. f. [garlande, garland, French.] A wreath of branches or flowers.

Strephon, with leavy twigs of laurel-tree,

A garland made, on temples for to wear;

For he then chosen was the dignity

Of village-lord that Whittitude to bear.

With every minute you do change a mind,

And call him noble, that was now your hate,

Him vile, that was your garland.

A reeling world will never stand upright,

'Till Richard wear the garland of the realm.

—How! wear the garland! do'st thou mean the crown?

—Ay, my good lord.

Then parry-colour'd flow'rs of white and red

She wove, to make a garland for her head.

Vanquish again; though she be gone,

Whose garland crown'd the victor's hair,

And reign; though she has left the throne,

Who made thy glory worth thy care.

Her gods and godlike heroes rise to view,

And all her faded garlands bloom anew.

GARLICK. n. f. [gar, Saxon, a lance, and lick, the lick that shoots up in blades. Stinner.]

It has a bulbous root, consisting of many small tubercles included in its coats; the leaves are plain: the flowers consist of six leaves, formed into a corymbous on the top of the stalk;

and are succeeded by subrotund fruits, divided into three cells, which contain roundish seeds.

Garlick is of an extremely strong, and to most people a disagreeable smell, and of an acrid and pungent taste. It is an extremely active and penetrating medicine, as may be proved by applying plasters of garlick to the soles of the feet, which will in a very little time give a strong smell to the breath.

It will smell strongly of garlick three or four hours after a person has eaten it; and given to fowls, it communicates its taste strongly to their flesh, and in some degree to their eggs.

Bruised, and laid on any tender part of the skin, it corrodes it, and raises blisters. Some are very fond of it in food; and a little of it is not only agreeable this way, but assists digestion, and strengthens the stomach.

Garlick has, of all our plants, the greatest strength, affords most nourishment, and supplies most spirits to those who eat little flesh.

'Tis mortal sin an onion to devour;

Each clove of garlick is a sacred pow'r:

Religious nations fow, and blest abodes,

Where ev'ry orchard is o'er-run with gods.

GARLICK Pear-tree. n. f.

It hath an anomalous flower, consisting of four petals or leaves, which stand erect, the lower part being occupied by a number of chives: the pointal, which is fixed on a long foot-stalk,

stalk, rises from the centre of the empalement, and afterward becomes a globular fleshy fruit; in the centre of which are included many seeds, which are shaped almost like kidneys. This tree is pretty common in Jamaica, and several other places in the warmer parts of America, where it usually rises to the height of thirty or forty feet, and spreads into many branches. When the flowers fall off the pointal, it becomes a round fruit about the size of a tennis-ball, which, when ripe, has a rough brownish rind, and a mealy sweet pulp, somewhat like some of the European pears; but has a strong scent of garlick.

GARLICK Wild. n. f.

The characters are: it agrees in every respect with the garlick; but hath, for the most part, a sweet scent; and the flowers are produced in an umbel.

GARLICKEATER n. f. [garlick and eat.] A mean fellow.

You've made good work,

You and your apron men, that stood so much

Upon the voice of occupation, and

The breath of garlickeater.

GARNMENT n. f. [garnishment, old French.] Any thing by which the body is covered; clothes; dress.

Hence, rotten thing, or I shall shake thy bones

Out of thy garments.

Halt any of thy late master's garments in thy possession?

Our leaf, once fallen, springeth no more; neither doth the fun or summer adorn us again with the garments of new leaves and flowers.

Three worthy persons from his side it tore,

And dy'd his garment with their scatter'd gore.

The peacock, in all his pride, does not display half the colours that appear in the garments of a British lady, when she is dressed.

GARNER n. f. [grenier, French.] A place in which threshed grain is stored up.

Earth's increase, and soyfon plenty,

Barns and garners never empty.

For sundry foes the rural realm surround;

The fieldmouse builds her garner under ground:

For gather'd grain the blind laborious mole,

In winding mazes, works her hidden hole.

TO GARNER v. a. [from the noun.] To store as in garners.

There, where I have garner'd up my heart,

Where either I must live, or bear no life.

GARNET n. f. [garnats, Italian; granatus, low Latin, from its resemblance in colour to the grain of the pomegranate.]

The garnet is a gem of a middle degree of hardness, between the sapphire and the common crystal. It is found of various sizes. Its surfaces are not so smooth or polite as those of a ruby, and its colour is ever of a strong red, with a plain admixture of bluish: its degree of colour is very different, and it always wants much of the brightness of the ruby.

The garnet seems to be a species of the cabuchet of the ancients: the Bohemian is red, with a slight cast of a flame-colour; and the Syrian is red, with a slight cast of purple.

It is called the Garnet in the East.

TO GARNISH v. a. [garnir, French.]

1. To decorate with ornamental appendages.

There were hills which garnished their proud heights with stately trees.

All within with flowers was garnish'd,

That, when mild Zephyrus amongst them blew,

Did breathe out bounteous smells, and painted colours shew.

Fairy Queen.

With taper light

To seek the beauteous eye of heav'n to garnish,

Is wasteful and ridiculous excess.

Paradise was a terrestrial garden, garnish'd with fruits, de-lighting both the eye and taste.

All the streets between the Bridge-foot and palace of Paul's,

where the king then lay, were garnish'd with the citizens, standing in their liveries.

2. To embellish a dish with something laid round it.

With what expence and art, how richly dress'd!

Garnish'd with 'sparagus, himself a feast!

No man lards salt pork with orange peel,

Or garnishes his lamb with spitchook's eel.

3. To fit with fetters.

GARNISH n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Ornament; decoration; embellishment.

So are you, sweet,

Ev'n in the lovely garnish of a boy.

Matter and figure they produce;

For garnish this, and that for use;

They seek to feed and please their gusts.

2. Things strewed round a dish.

3. [In galls.] Fetters.

4. Penitentiaria carceraria; an acknowledgment in money when first a prisoner goes into a goal.

GARNISHMENT n. f. [from garnish.] Ornament; embellishment.

The church of Santa Guisliniana in Padua is a fine piece of good art, where the materials being but ordinary, without any garnishment of sculpture, do ravish the beholder.

GARNITURE n. f. [from garnish.] Furniture; ornament.

They conclude, if they fall short in the garniture of their knices, that they are inferior in the furniture of their heads.

Government of the tongue.

Plain sense, which pleas'd your fies an age ago,

Is lost, without the garniture of show.

As nature has poued out her charms upon the rude part of our species, so they are very allusive in bestowing upon themselves the finest garnitures of art.

GARROUS adj. [from garum.] Resembling pickled meat of fish.

In a civet-cat a different and offensive odour proceeds, partly from its food, that being especially fish; without this humour may be a garrous excretion, and likewise from the word is still retained in Scotland.] A small horse, called a

A Highland horse, which, when brought into the north of England, takes the name of garrow.

When he comes forth he will make their cows and geese to walk, if he doth no other harm to their persons.

Every man would be forced to provide winter fuel for his team, whereas common garrows feed upon grass the year round; and this would force men to the enclosing of grounds, so that the race of garrows would decrease.

GARRET n. f. [garrit, the tower of a citadel, French.]

1. A room on the highest floor of the house.

The mob, commotion'd by the government,

Are seldom to an empty garret sent.

John Bull skipped from room to room; ran up stairs and down stairs, from the kitchen to the garret.

On earth the god of wealth was made

Sole patron of the building trade;

Leaving the arts the spacious air,

With licence to build castles there:

And 'tis conceiv'd their old pretence,

To lodge in garrets, comes from thence.

2. Rotten wood.

The colour of the shining part of rotten wood, by den-light, is in some pieces white, and in some pieces yellow to red, which they call the white and red garret.

GARLETER n. f. [from garret.] An inhabitant of a garret.

GARRISON n. f. [garnison, French.]

1. Soldiers placed in a fortified town or castle to defend it.

How oft he said to me,

Thou art no soldier fit for Cupid's garriſon.

2. Fortified place stored with soldiers.

Whom the old Roman wall so ill confin'd,

With a new chain of garriſon you bind.

Some of them that are laid in garriſon will do no great harm to the enemies.

TO GARRISON v. a. [from the verb.] To secure by in-terdicts,

Others those forces join,

Which garriſon the conquests near the Rhine.

GARRULITY n. f. [garrulitas, Latin.]

1. Loquacity; incontinence of tongue; inability to keep a secret.

Let me here

Expiate, if possible, my crime,

Shameful garrulity.

2. The quality of talking too much; talkativeness.

Some vices of speech must carefully be avoided: first of all,

loquacity or garrulity.

GARRULOUS adj. [garrulus, Latin.] Prattling; talkative.

Old age looks out,

And garrulous recounts the feats of youth.

GARTER n. f. [garter, Welsh; garter, French; from garter,

the binding of the knee.]

1. A thing or ribbon by which the stocking is held upon the leg.

Let their heads be flecky comb'd, their blue coats bristled, and their garters of an indifferent knit.

When we rest in our cloaths we loosen out garters, and other ligatures, to give the spirits free passage.

Handsome garters at your knees.

There lay three garters, half a pair of gloves,

And all the trophies of his former loves.

2. The mark of the order of the garter, the highest order of English knighthood.

Now by my george, my garter.

—The george, profand, hath lost his holy honour;

The garter, blismit, pawn'd his knighdy virtue.

You owe your Ormond nothing but a son,
To fill in future times his father's place,
And wear the garter of his mother's race.

Dryden.

3. The principal king at arms.

To GARTER, v. a. [from the noun.] To bind with a garter.
He, being in love, could not see to garter his hose. Shaksp.

GARTH, n. f. [as if girth, from gird.] The bulk of the body measured by the girdle.

GAS, n. f. [A word invented by the chymists.] It is used by Van Helmont, and seems designed to signify, in general, a spirit not capable of being coagulated: but he uses it loosely in many senses, and very unintelligibly and inconsistently. Har.
GASCONADE, n. f. [French, from Gascou, a nation eminent for boasting.] A boast; a bravado.

Was it a gasconade to please me, that you said your fortune was increased one hundred a year since I left you? Swift.
To GASCONADE, v. n. [from the noun.] To boast; to brag; to bluster.

To GASH, v. a. [from bacher, to cut, French. Skinner.] To cut deep so as to make a gaping wound; to cut with a blunt instrument so as to make the wound wide.

Where the Englishmen at arms had been defeated, many of their horses were found grievously gashed or gored to death. Huyward.

Wit is a keen instrument, and every one can cut and gash with it; but to carve a beautiful image requires great art.

Tillotson, Sermon 2.

See me gash'd with knives,

Or fear'd with burning steel.

Ruse.

Streaming with blood, all over gash'd with wounds,
He reel'd, he groan'd, and at the altar fell.

A. Phillips.

GASIL, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A deep and wide wound.

He glancing on his helmet, made a large
And open gash therein; were not his target,
That broke the violence of his intent,

The weary soul from thence it would discharge. Spenser.

A perilous gash, a very limb lost off.
Hamilton drove Newton almost to the end of the lills; but Newton on a sudden gave him such a gash on the leg, that therewith he fell to the ground. Huyward.

But th' ethereal substance clos'd,

Not less dividible; and from the gash

A stream of uctatious humour issuing flow'd. Milton.

2. The mark of a wound. I know not if this be proper.

I was fond of back-sword and cudgel play, and I now bear in my body many a black and blue gash and scar. Arbutnot.
GASKINS, n. f. [from Gascogne. See GALLIGASKINS.]
Wide hose; wide breeches. An old ludicrous word.

If one point break, the other will hold;

Or, if both break, your gaskins fall. Shaksp.

1. To open the mouth wide to catch breath.

The sick for air before the portal gasp. Dryden.

They rais'd a feeble cry with trembling notes;

But the weak voice deceiv'd their *gasp*ing throats. Dryden.

The *gasp*ing head flies off; a purple flood

Flows from the trunk. Dryden.

The ladies gasp'd, and scarcely could respire;

The breath they drew no longer air, but fire. Dryden.

A fainting of wit lay *gasp*ing for life, and groaning beneath a heap of rubbish. Dryden.

Pale and faint,

He gasps for breath; and, as his life flows from him,

Demands to see his friends. Addison.

2. To emit breath by opening the mouth convulsively.

I lay me down to gasp my lastest breath;

The wolves will get a breakfast by my death. Dryden.

He flangers round, his eyeballs roll in death,

And with short sobs he gasps away his breath. Dryden.

3. To long for. This sense is, I think, not proper, as nature never expresses desire by *gasp*ing.

The Cælian and his wife had the comfort to be under the same master, who, seeing how dearly they loved one another, and *gasp*ed after their liberty, demanded a most exorbitant price for their ransom. Spectator.

GASP, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of opening the mouth to catch breath.

2. The short catch of breath in the last agonies.

His fortunes all lie speechless, and his name

Is at last gasp. Shaksp.

Ah, Warwick, Montague hath breath'd his last;

And to the latest gasp cry'd out for Warwick. Shaksp.

If in the dreadful hour of death,

If at the latest gasp of breath,

When the cold damp bedews your brow,

You hope for mercy, shew it now.

Addison.

Life's business at one gasp be o'er.

Pope.

To GAST, v. a. [from gast, Saxon. See AGHAST.] To make aghast; to fright; to shock; to terrify; to fear; to affray.

When he saw my best alarmed spirits,
Beld in the quarrel's right, rous'd to th' encounter,
Or whether *gast*ed by the noise I made,
Full suddenly he fled. Shaksp.

GASTRICK, adj. [from γαστήρ.] Belonging to the belly.

GASTROGRAPHY, n. f. [γαστήρ and γραφω.] In strictness of etymology, signifies no more than scrawling up any wound of the belly; yet in common acceptation it implies, that the wound of the belly is complicated with another of the intestine. Skarp.

GASTROTOMY, n. f. [γαστήρ and τομή.] The act of cutting open the belly.

GAT, n. The preterite of get.

Moses gat him up into the mount. Exodus.

GATE, n. f. [gear, Saxon.]

1. The door of a city, a castle, palace, or large building.

Open the gate of mercy, gracious God!

My soul flows through these wounds to seek thee. Shaksp.

Gates of monarchs

Are arch'd so high, that giants may jet through,

And keep their impious turbauds on, without

Good-morrow to the sun. Shaksp.

2. A frame of timber upon hinges to give a passage into inclosed grounds.

Know'st thou the way to Dover?

— Both stile and gate, horleway and footpath. Shaksp.

3. An avenue; an opening.

Austria had done nothing but wisely and politically, in setting the Venetians together by the ears with the Turks, and opening a gate for a long war. Knellet.

GATEVEIN, n. f. The vena porta.

Being a kind that loved wealth, he could not endure to have trade sick, nor any obstruction to continue in the gatevein which disperseth that blood. Bacon.

GATEWAY, n. f. [gate and way.] A way through gates of inclosed grounds.

Gateways between inclosures are so many, that they cannot cart between one field and another. Merrimer.

To GATHER, v. a. [gæþran, Saxon.]

gathered my knowledge; for I am but a gatherer. Hutton.

To pay the creditor, that lent him his rent, he must gather up money by degrees, as the sale of his commodities shall bring it in. Locke.

3. To crop.

What have I done?

To see my youth, my beauty, and my love

No sooner gath'd, but fighted and betray'd;

And like a rose just gather'd from the stalk,

But only smelt, and cheaply thrown aside,

To wither on the ground! Dryden.

4. To assemble.

They have gathered themselves together against me. Jeh.

Come, ye heathen, and gather yourselves together. Jeh.

He led us through three fair streets; and all the way we went there were gathered some people on both sides, standing in a row. Bacon.

The reason that I gather he is mad,
Is a mad tale, he told to-day at dinner,
Of his own door being shut against his entrance. Stakep.
After he had seen the vision, we endeavoured to get into Macedonia, assuredly gathering that the Lord had called us. Acts xvi. 10.

Return'd

By night, and listening where the hapless pair
Sat in their sad discourse, and various plaint, Thence gather'd his own doom. Milton.
Mademoiselle de Scudery, who is as old as Sibyl, is at this time translating Chaucer into modern French: from which I gather, that he has formerly been translated into the old Provençal. Dryden.

We may easily gather from this passage what notion the ancients had concerning a future state. Notes on the Odyssey.

If ere night the gathering clouds we fear,
A long will help the beating storm to bear. Dryden.
When gathering clouds o'ershadow all the skies,
And shoot quick lightnings, weigh, my boys! he cries. Dry.
When the rival winds their quarrel try,
South, East and West, on airy couriers born,
The whirlwind gathers, and the woods are torn. Dryden.
Think on the storm that gathers o'er your head,
And threatens every hour to burst upon it. Addison.
2. To grow larger by the accretion of similar matter.
Their snow-ball did not gather as it went; for the people came not in to them. Bacon.
3. To assemble.
There be three things that mine heart feareth; the slander of a city, the gathering together of an unruly multitude, and a false accusation. Ecclus.
4. To generate pus or matter.
Ask one, who by repeated restraints hath subdued his natural rage, how he likes the change, and he will tell you 'tis no less happy than the ease of a broken imposthume after the painful gathering and filling of it. Decay of Piety.

GATHER. n. f. [from the verb.] Pucker; cloth drawn together in wrinkles.
Give laws for pantaloons,
The length of breeches, and the gathers, Hudibras.

ings when I come. 1 Cor.
GATTEN-TREE. See CORNELIAN-CHERRY, of which it is a species.

GAUDE. n. f. [The etymology of this word is uncertain:
Stinner imagines it may come from gaudeo, French, a yellow flower, yellow being the most gaudy colour. Junius, according to his custom, talks of γαυδα; and Mr. Lye finds gaude, in Dunglass, to signify deceit or fraud, from gaudius, Welsh, to cheat. It seems to be most easily deducible from gaudium, Latin, joy; the cause of joy; a token of joy: thence aptly applied to any thing that gives or expresses pleasure. In Scotland this word is still retained, both as a showy bawble, and the person fooled. It is also retained in Scotland to denote a yellow flower.] An ornament; a fine thing; any thing worn as a sign of joy.

He stole th' impression of her fantasy,
With bracelets of thy hair, rings, gaudeis, conceits,
Knacks, trifles, nosegays, sweetmeats. Shakespeare.
The fun is in the heav'n, and the proud day,
Attended with the pleasures of the world,
Is all too wanton, and too full of gaudeis,
To give me audience. Shakespeare.

My love to Hermia
Is melted as the snow; seems to me now
As the remembrance of an idle gaude,
Which in my childhood I did dote upon. Shakespeare.

Some bound for Guiney, golden land to find,
Bore all the gaudeis the simple natives wear;
Some for the pride of Turkish courts design'd,
For folded turbans finest holland bear. Dryden.
To GAUDE. v. a. [gaudeo, Latin.] To exult; to rejoice in any thing.

Go to a gossip's feast, and gaude with me,
After long grief such nativity. Shakespeare.
GAUDERY. n. f. [from gaude.] Finery; ostentatious luxury of drets.

The triumph was not pageants and gaudery, but one of the wisest and noblest institutions that ever was.
Age, which is but one remove from death, and should have nothing about us but what looks like a decent preparation for it, scarce ever appears, of late, but in the high style, the flaunting garb, and utmost gaudery of youth, with cloaths as ridiculously, and as much in the fashion, as the person that wears them is usually grown out of it. Swift.

A plain suit, since we can make but one,
Is better than to be by tarnish'd gaudery known. Dryden.
GAUDILY. adv. [from gaudy.] Showily.
GAUDINESS. n. f. [from gaudy.] Showiness; ostentatiousness.
GAUDY. adj. [from gaude.] Showy; splendid; pompous;
ostentatiously fine.

Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy,
But not exprest in fancy; rich, not gaudy;
For the apparel oft proclaims the man. Shakespeare.
Fancies fond with gaudy shapes possets,
As thick and numberless

As the gay motes that people the sun-beams. Milton.
A man who walks directly to his journey's end, will move thither much sooner than him who wanders about to gaze at every thing, or to gather every gaudy flower. Watts.

A goldfinch there I saw, with gaudy pride
Of painted plumes, that hopp'd from side to side. Dryden.
The Bavarian duke his brigades leads,
Gallant in arms, and gaudy to behold. Philips.

GAUDY. n. f. [gaudium, Latin.] A feast; a festival; a day of plenty.

He may surely be content with a fast to-day, that is free of a gaudy to-morrow. Watts.

GAVE. The preterite of give.

Thou can't not every day give me thy heart;
If thou can't give it, then thou never gav'st it.
Lovers riddles are, that thou thy heart depriv'st.
It stays at home, and thou with losing gav'st it. Dante.

GAVEL. n. f. A provincial word for ground.

GAVELKIND. n. f. [In law.] A custom whereby the land of the father are equally divided at his death amongst all his sons, or the land of the brother equally divided among the brothers, if he have no issue of his own. This custom is of great divers places of England, but especially in Kent. Watts.
Among other Welsh customs he abolished that of gavelkind, whereby the heirs female were utterly excluded, and the barbards did inherit as well as the legitimate, which is the very Irish gavelkind. Davies on Wales.

To GAUGE. v. a. [gaugere, gaugre, a measuring rod, French. It is pronounced gage.]

1. To measure with respect to the contents of a vessel.
2. To measure with regard to any proportion.

The vases nicely gauged on each side, broad on one side, and narrow on the other, both which minister to the progressive motion of the bird. Dante.

There is nothing more perfectly admirable in gavelkind than artful manner in Homer's battles of taking measures of gaging his heroes by each other, and thereby elevating the diameter of one person by the opposition of it to some other he is made to excel. Watts.

GAUGE. n. f. [from the verb.] A measure; a standard.
This plate must be a gauge to file your work and grooves to equal breadth by. Milton.

If money were to be hired, as land is, or to be had from the owner himself, it might then be had at the market rate, which would be a constant gauge of trade and wealth. Watts.

Timothy proposed to his mistress, that the shoemaker should no servant that was above four foot seven inches high, and for that purpose had prepared a gauge, by which they were to be measured. Watts.

GAUGER. n. f. [from gauge.] One whose business it is to measure vessels or quantities.

Those earls and dukes have, from the beginnings, been privileged with royal jurisdiction; and, to this end, appointed their special officers, as their, admirals, gaugers, and custumars.
Carriv's Survey of Cornwall.

GAUNT. adj. [As if gaucunt, from grypanian, to lean, Italian.]
Thin; slender; lean; meagre.

Oh, how that name befits my composition!
Old Gaunt, indeed, and gaunt in being old:
Within me grief hath kept a tedious fast;
And who abitaits from meat that is not gaunt? Shakespeare.

For sleeping England long time have I watch'd ;
Watching breeds leannefs, leannefs is all gaunt ;
The pleasure that fome fathers feed upon,
Is my strict fast ; I mean my childrens looks ;
And therein fasting, thou haft made me gaunt :
Gaunt am I for the grave, gaunt as a grave,
Whole hollow womb inherits nought but bones. Shakeſp.

Two maſtiffs, gaunt and grim, her flight purſu'd,
And oft their fallen'd fangs in blood embur'd. Dryden.

GAUNTLET. adv. [from gaunt.] Leanly ; ſlenderly ; meagrely.

GAUNTLET. n. f. [gantelet, French.] An iron glove uſed for defence, and thrown down in challenges. It is ſometimes in poetry uſed for the cuſtus, or boxing glove.

A ſcally gauntlet now, with joints of ſteel,
Muſt glove this hand. Shakeſpear.

Feel but the difference, ſoft and rough ;
This a gauntlet, that a muſſ. Cleaveland.

Some ſhall in ſwiftnefs for the goal contend,
And others try the twanging bow to bend ;
The ſtrong with iron gauntlets arm'd ſhall ſtand,
Oppos'd in combat, on the yellow ſand. Dryden.

Who naked wreſtled beſt, beſiear'd with oil ;
Or who with gauntlets gave or took the foil. Dryden.

The funeral of ſome valiant knight
May give this thing its proper light :

View his two gauntlets ; theſe declare
That both his hands were uſed to war. Prior.

So to repel the Vandals of the ſtage,
Our vet'ran bard refumes his tragick rage ;

He throws the gauntlet Otway uſ'd to wield,
And calls for Engliſhmen to judge the field. Southern.

GE'OMETRICAL. adj. [γεωμετρικός; geometrique, French; from geomancy.]

GE'OMETRICK. adj. [geomancy.]

1. Pertaining to geometry.

A geometrical scheme is let in by the eyes, but the demonstration is discerned by reason.

This mathematical discipline, by the help of geometrical principles, doth teach to contrive several weights and powers unto motion or rest.

2. Prescribed or laid down by geometry.

Mult men take the measure of God just by the line geometrical proportions that he did, that gather'd the height and breadth of Hercules by his foot?

Does not this wife philosopher assert,
That the vast orb, which calls to far his beams,
Is such, or not much bigger than he seems?
That the dimensions of his glorious face
Two geometrick feet do scarce surpass?

Blackmore.

3. Disposed according to geometry.

Geometrick Jasper seemeth of affinity with the lapis sanguinalis described by Boetius; but it is certainly one sort of lapis crassissimus. Grew.

GEOMETRICALLY. adv. [from geometrical.] According to the laws of geometry.

'Tis possible geometrically to contrive such an artificial motion as shall be of a greater swiftness than the revolutions of the heavens. Wiliam.

All the bones, muscles, and vessels of the body are contrived most geometrically, according to the strictest rules of mechanics. Ray.

GEOMETRICIAN. n. f. [γεωμετρικός.] One skilled in geometry; a geometer.

Although there be a certain truth therein, geometricians would not receive satisfaction without demonstration thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

How easily does an expert geometrician, with one glance of his eye, take in a complicated diagram, made up of many lines and circles! Watts.

TO GEOMETRIZE. v. n. [γεωμετρίω.] To act according to the laws of geometry.

We obtained good store of crystals, whose figures were differing enough, though perfectly shaped, as if nature had at once affected variety in their formation, and yet confined herself to geometrize. Boyle.

GEOMETRICAL. n. f. [γεωμετρικά; geometric, French.] Originally signifies the art of measuring the earth, or any distances or dimensions on or within it: but it is now used for the science of quantity, extension, or magnitude abstractedly considered, without any regard to matter.

Geometry very probably had its first rise in Egypt, where the Nile annually overflowing the country and covering it with mud, obliged men to distinguish their lands (one from another, by the consideration of their figure; and after which, 'tis probable, to be able also to measure the quantity of it, and to know how to plot it, and lay it out again in its just dimensions, figure and proportion: after which it is likely, a farther contemplation of those draughts and figures helped them to discover many excellent and wonderful properties belonging to them; which speculations were continually improving, and are still to this day. Geometry is usually divided into speculative and practical; the former of which contemplates and treats of the properties of continued quantity abstractedly; and the latter applies these speculations and theorems to use and practice, and to the benefit and advantage of mankind. Harris.

In the muscles alone there seems to be more geometry than in all the artificial engines in the world. Ray.

His also for my comfort I disdain,
Who thinks all science, as all virtue vain;
Who counts geometry and numbers toys,
And with his loose the sacred dust destroys. Dryden.

GEOPONICAL. adj. [γῆ and ποίος; geoponice, French.] Relating to agriculture; relating to the cultivation of the ground. Such expressions are frequent in authors geoponical, or such as have treated de re rustica. Brown.

GERMAN. n. f. [germanus, French; germanus, Lat.] Brother; one approaching to a brother in proximity of blood: thus the children of brothers or sisters are called cousins german.

They knew it was their cousin german, the famous Amphialus. Sidney.

And to him said, go now proud miscreant,
Thyself thy message do to german dear. Spenser.

These German did subdue all Germany,
Of whom it hight; but in the end their fire,
With foul repulse, from France was forced to retire. Spem.
Wert thou a bear, thou wouldest be kill'd by the horie;
Wert thou a horse, thou wouldest be seiz'd by the leopard;
Wert thou a leopard, thou wert german to the lion, and the spots of thy kindred were juries on thy life. Shakspeare.

You'll have your nephews neigh to you; you'll have courtiers for cousins, and generals for germans. Shakspeare.

GERMAN. adj. [germanus, Latin.] Related.

Not be alone shall suffer what wit can make heavy, and vengeance bitter; but those that are german to him, though removed fifty times, shall come under the hangman. Shakspeare.

GERMANDER. n. f. [germandrie, French.]

It has small thick leaves, which are laciniated somewhat like those of the oak: the flowers, which are produced at the wings of the leaves, are labiated: the stamina or threads supply the place of the crest, or upper lip; the beard or lower lip of the flower is divided into five parts: the middle segment, which is largest, is hollow like a spoon, and sometimes divided into two parts: the cup of the flower is fistulous. Miller.

GERME. n. f. [germen, Latin.] A sprout or shoot; that part which grows and spreads.

Whether it be not made out of the germe, or treadle of the egg, doth seem of lesser doubt. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

GERMIN. n. f. [germen, Latin.] A shooting or sprouting seed.

Though palaces and pyramids do slope
Their heads to their foundations; though the treasure
Of nature's germins tumble all together,
Even till destruction sickens; answer me
To what I ask you. Shakspeare.

Thou all-shaking thunder,
Strike flat the thick rotundity o' th' world;
Crack nature's mould, all germins spill at once
That make ungrateful man. Shakspeare.

TO GERMINATE. v. n. [germinis, Latin.] To sprout; to shoot; to bud; to put forth.

This action is furthered by the chalcites, which hath within a spirit that put forth and germinate, as we see in chymical trials. Bacon.

The seeds of all kinds of vegetables being planted near the surface of the earth, in a convenient soil, amongst matter proper for the formation of vegetables, would germinate, grow up, and replenish the face of the earth. Woodward.

GERMINATION. n. f. [germination, French; from germinate.] The act of sprouting or shooting; growth.

For acceleration of germination, we refer it over unto the place, where we shall handle the subject of plants generally.

Bacon's Natural History.

The duke of Buckingham had another kind of germination; and surely, had he been a plant, he would have been reckoned among the sponte nascetes. Wotton.

There is but little similitude between a terreous humidity and plantal germination. Glanville.

Suppose the earth should be carried to the great distance of Saturn; there the whole globe would be one frigid zone; there would be no life, no germination. Bentley.

GERUND. n. f. [gerundium, Latin.] In the Latin grammar, a kind of verbal noun, which governs cases like a verb.

GEST. n. f. [gestum, Latin.]

3. The roll or journal of the several days, and stages, prefixed, in the progresses of our kings, many of them being still extant in the herald's office. [From geste, or gite, Fr.] Hammer.

I'll give you my commission,

To let him there a month, behind the gest,
Prefix'd for's parting. Shakspeare.

He distinctly sets down the gests and progress thereof; and are conceits of eminent use, to solve magneetical phenomena.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

GESTATION. n. f. [gestatio, Latin.] The act of bearing the young in the womb.

Aristotle affirmeth the birth of the infant, or time of its gestation, extendeth sometimes unto the eleventh month; but Hippocrates avers that it exceedeth not the tenth. Brown.

Why in viviparous animals, in the time of gestation, should the nourishment be carried to the embryo in the womb, which at other times goeth not that way? Ray.

TO GESTICULATE. v. n. [gesticular, Latin; gesticular, Fr.] To play antick tricks; to show postures.

GESTICULATION. n. f. [gesticulatio, Latin; gesticulation, Fr. from gesticulate.] Antick tricks; various postures.

GESTURE. n. f. [gestus, gestum, Latin; geste, French.]

1. Action or posture expressive of sentiment.

Ah, my sister, if you had heard his words, or seen his gestures.

gesture, when he made me know what and to whom his love was, you would have matched in yourself, those two rarely matched together, pity and delight. Sidney.

When we make profession of our faith, we stand; when we acknowledge our sins, or seek unto God for favour, we fall down; because the gesture of constancy becometh us best in the one, in the other the behaviour of humility. Hosker.

To the dumbness of the gesture

Shakespeare.

One might interpret.

2. Movement of the body.

Grace was in all her steps, heav'n in her eye,

In ev'ry gesture dignity and love!

Milton.

Every one will agree in this, that we ought either to lay aside all kinds of gesture, or at least to make use of such only as are graceful and expressive.

Addison.

To GET'STUNE. v. a. [from the noun.] To accompany with action or posture.

Our attire disgreceth it; it is not orderly read, not gestured as becometh.

3. Inconstant; mutable; unsteady; changeful.

Our fancies are more giddy and unfirm,

More longing, wavering, sooner lost and won,

Than women are. Shakespeare.

It may be gnats and flies have their imagination more mutable and giddy, as small birds likewise have. Bacon.

Thanks to giddy chance, which never bears;

That mortal bliss should last for length of years,

She cast us headlong from our high estate,

And here in hope of thy return we wait. Dryden.

The giddy vulgar, as their fancies guide,

With noise say nothing, and in parts divide. Dryden.

You are as giddy and volatile as ever, the reverse of Pope, who hath always loved a domestic life. Swift to Pope.

4. That which causes giddiness.

The frequent errors of the pathless wood,

The giddy precipice, and the dang'rous flood. Prior.

The sylphs through mystick mazes guide their way,

Through all the giddy circle they pursue. Pope.

5. Headless; thoughtless; uncautious; wild.

Too many giddy foolish hours are gone,

And in fantastick measures danc'd away. Renn.

How inexcusable are those giddy creatures, who, in the same hour, leap from a parent's window to a husband's bed. Clarissa.

6. Tottering; unfix'd.

As we pac'd along

Upon the giddy footing of the hatches,

Methought that Gloster stumbled. Shakespeare.

7. Intoxicated; elated to thoughtlessness; overcome by any overpowering intiment.

Art thou not giddy with the fashion too, that thou hast shifted out of thy tale into telling me of the fashion? Shakespeare.

Like one of two contending in a prize,

That thinks he hath done well in people's eyes;

Hearing applause and universal shout,

Giddy in spirit, gazing still in doubt,

Whether those peals of praise be his or no. Shakespeare.

GIDDYBRAINED. adj. [giddy and brain.] Careless; thoughtless.

Turn

Turn him out again, you unnecessary, useless, giddybrained ass.

GIDDYHEADED, adj. [giddy and head.] Without thought or caution; without steadiness or constancy.

And sooner may a gulling weather spy,
By drawing forth heav'n's scheme defery
What fashion'd hats or ruffs, or suits, next year,
Our giddy-headed antick youth will wear. Dante.
That men are so misaffected, melancholy, giddy-headed,
hear the testimony of Solomon. Burton.

GIDDYPACED, adj. [giddy and pace.] Moving without regularity.

More than light airs, and recollected times,
Of these most brisk and giddy-paced times. Shakespeare.

GIER-EAGLE, n. f. [Sometimes it is written jer-eagle.] An eagle of a particular kind.

These fowls shall not be eaten, the swan and the pelican,
And the gier-eagle. Lev. xi. 18.

GIFT, n. f. [from give.]

1. A thing given or bestowed; something conferred without price.

They presented unto him gifts, gold, and frankincense and myrrh. Mat. ii. 11.

Recall your gifts, for I your pow'r confess;
But first take back my life, a gift that's lefts. Dryden.

2. The act of giving.
No man has any antecedent right or claim to that which comes to him by free gift. South.

3. Oblation; offering.
Many nations shall come with gifts in their hands, even gifts to the king of heaven. Yeb. xiii. 11.

4. A bribe.
Thou shalt not wrest judgment, thou shalt not respect persons, neither take a gift; for a gift doth blind the eyes of the wise. Deut. xvi. 19.

5. Power; faculty.
And if the boy have not a woman's gift,
To rain a shower of commanded tears,
An onion will do well for such a shift. Shakespeare.

He who has the gift of ridicule, finds fault with anything that gives him an opportunity of exerting his beloved talent. Addison.

GIFTED, adj. [from gift.]

1. Given; bestowed.
Made of my enemies the scorn and gaze,
To grind in brazen fetters, under task,
With my heav'n's gift strength. Milton.

2. Endowed with extraordinary powers. It is commonly used ironically.
Two of their gifted brotherhood, Hacket and Coppinger, got up into a pease-cart, and harranged the people to dispose them to an insurrection. Dryden.

There is no talent so pernicious as eloquence, to those who have it not under command; women, who are so liberally gifted by nature in this particular, ought to study the rules of female oratory. Addison.

GIG, n. f. [Etymology uncertain.]

1. Any thing that is whirled round in play.
Playthings, as tops, gigs, battledores, should be procured them. Locke.

2. [Gigia, Islandick.] A fiddle. Now out of use.

GIGANTICK, adj. [gigante, Latin.] Suitable to a giant; big; bulky; enormous; likewise wicked; atrocious.

Others from the wall defend
With dart and jav'lin, stones, and sulphurous fire;
On each hand slaughter and gigantick deeds! Milton.

I dread him not, nor all his giant-brood,
Though fame divulg'd him father of five sons,
All of gigantick size, Goliath chief. Milton.

The son of Hercules he justly seems,
By his broad shoulders and gigantick limbs. Dryden.

The Cyclopean race in arms arose;
A lawless nation of gigantick foes. Pope.

To GIGGLE, v. n. [gibgelen, Dutch.] To laugh idly; to titter; to grin with merry levity. It is retained in Scotland.

GIGGLER, n. f. [from giggle.] A laugher; a titterer; one idly and foolishly merry.

A sad wide valour is the brave complexion,
That leads the van, and swallows up the cities:
The giggler is a milk-maid, whom infection,
Or the fir'd beacon, frighteth from his ditties. Herbert.

We shew our present, jokings, giggling race,
True joy consists in gravity and grace. Garrick.

GIGLEY, n. f. [geag, Saxon; gyl, Dutch; gillet, Scottish, is still retained.] A wanton; a lascivious girl. Now out of use.

Young Talbot was not born
To be the pillage of a giglet wench. Shakespeare.

The fam'd Castellan was once at point,
Oh giglet fortune! to master Caesar's sword. Shakespeare.

Away with those giglets too, and with the other confederate companion. Shakespeare.

GIGOT, n. f. [French.] The hip joint.

To GILD, v. a. pret. gilded, or gilt. [Gilean, Saxon.]

1. To wash over with gold; to cover with foliated gilt.

The room was large and wide,
As it some gilt or solemn temple were;
Many great golden pillars did appear.

The massy roof, and riches huge sustain,
Gilded wood many worms infold.

To oild refined gold, to paint the lily,
To throw a perfume on the violet.

And the gilded car of day
His glowing axle doth alay
In the steep Atlantic stream.

Purchasing riches with our time and care,
We lose our freedom in a gilded snare.

When Britain, looking with a just disdain
Upon this gilded majesty of Spain,

And knowing well that empire must decline,
Whose chief support and finews are of coin.

Her joy in gilded chariots, when alive;
And love of ombre after death survive.

2. To cover with any yellow matter.

Thou didst drink
The stale of horses and the gilded puddle,
Which beasts would cough at.

3. To adorn with lustre.
No more the rising sun shall gild the mom,
Nor evening Cynthia fill her silver horn.

4. To brighten; to illuminate.
The lightsome passion of joy was not that trivial, vanishing, superficial things, that only gilds the appearance and plays upon the surface of the soul.

5. To recommend by adventitious ornaments.
For my part, if a lie may do thee grace,
I'll gild it with the happiest terms I have.

Yet, oh! th' imperfect piece moves more than gold;
'Tis gilded o'er with youth, to catch the light.

GILDER, n. f. [from gild.]

1. One who lays gold on the surface of any other body.
Gilders use to have a piece of gold in their mouth, to brew the spirits of the quicksilver.

We have here a gilder with his amil and hammer.

2. A coin, from one shilling and sixpence, to two shillings.

I am bound
To Persia, and want gilders for my voyage.

GILDING, n. f. [from gild.] Gold laid on any surface by way of ornament.

Silvering will fully and canker more than gilding, which, if it might be corrected with a little mixture of gild, does it profit.

The church of the Annunciation, all but one corner, is covered with statues, gilding and paint.

Could laureate Dryden pimp and fry'r engage,
And I not strip the gilding off a knave,

Unplac'd, unpension'd, no, man's heir or slave?

GILL, n. f. [agulla, Spanish; gula, Latin.]

1. The apertures at each side of a fish's head.

The leviathan,
Stretch'd like a promontory, sleeps or swims,
And seems a moving land; and at his gills
Draws in, and at his trunk spouts out a sea.

Fishes perform their respiration under water by the gills.

He hath, on the bottom of his sides, two gills, one behind the gills, as in most fishes, but for a good part behind them.

'Till they, of farther passage quite bereft,
Were in the maw with gills entangled left.

2. The flaps that hang below the beak of a fowl.

The turkeycock hath great and swelling gills, and the hen hath less.

3. The flesh under the chin.

In many there is no paleness at all; but, contrariwise, paleness about the cheeks and gills, which is by the leading from the spirits in an appetite to revenge.

Like the long bag of flesh hanging down from the gills of the people in Piedmont.

4. [Gilla, barbarous Latin.] A measure of liquids containing the fourth part of a pint.

Every bottle must be rinsed with wine: some, out of respect taken thrice, will rinse a dozen with the same: charge the wine at every second bottle: a gill may be enough.

5. [From giltian, the old English way of writing Jas or Jasiana.] The appellation of a woman in Italian language.

I can, for I will,
Here at Burley o' th' Hill,
Give you all your fill,
Each Jack with his Gill.

6. The name of a plant; ground-ivy.
 7. Malt liquor medicated with ground-ivy.
 GILLHOUSE. n. f. [gill and house.] A house where gill is sold.

There shall each alehouse, thee each gillhouse mourn,
 And answ'ring gillshops fourer sighs return. Pope.
 GILLFLOWER. n. f. [Either corrupted from July flower, or from gillflower, French.]

Gillflowers, or rather Julyflowers, so called from the month they blow in, are of a very great variety; but they may be reduced to these sorts: red and white, purple and white, scarlet and white, the various kinds of which are too many to enumerate. Mortimer.

In July come gillflowers of all varieties. Bacon.
 Fair is the gillflower of gardens sweet,
 Fair is the marigold, for postage meet. Gay.

GILT. n. f. [from gold.] Golden blow; gold laid on the surface of any matter. Now obsolete.

Our gayness and our gilt are all befinch'd,
 With rainy marching in the painful field. Shakspeare.
 When thou wast in thy gilt, and thy perfume, they mockt thee for too much curiosity: in thy rags thou know'st none, but art despis'd for the contrary. Shakspeare.

The double gilt of this opportunity you let time wash off. Shakspeare.

GILT. The participle of GILD, which see.

Where the gilt chariot never mark'd its way. Pope.
 GILT-HEAD. n. f. [gilt and head.] A sea-fish. Dill.

GILT-TAIL. n. f. [gilt and tail.] A worm so called from his yellow tail.
 GIM. adj. [An old word.] Neat; spruce; well dressed.

GIMCRACK. n. f. [Supposed, by skinner, to be ludicrously formed from gin, derived from engine.] A flight or trivial mechanism.

For though these gimcracks were away,
 However, more reduc'd and plain,
 The watch would still a watch remain;
 But if the horal orbit ceases,
 The whole stands still, or breaks to pieces. Prior.

What's the meaning of all these trigrams and gimcracks?
 What, in the name of wonder, are you going about, jumping over my master's hedges, and running your lines cross his grounds? Arbutnot.

GIMLET. n. f. [gikele, guimale, French.] A borer with a screw at its point.
 The gimlet hath a worm at the end of its bit. Moxon.
 GIMMAL. n. f. [Supposed by Skinner and Disfworth to be derived from gimel, Latin, and to be used only of something consisting of correspondent parts, or double. It seems rather to be gradually corrupted from geometry or geometrical.] Some little quaint devices or pieces of machinery. Hammer.

I think by some odd gimmals or device
 Their arms are fet like clocks, still to strike on,
 Else they could not hold out for as they do. Shakspeare.

GIMMER. n. f. [See GIMMAL.] Movement; machinery.
 To be doing together of the parts of matter has confounded me, that I have been prone to conclude with myself, that the gimmers of the world hold together not so much by geometry as some natural magic. Mere.

GIMP. n. f. [See GIM.] Gimp, in old English, is neat, spruce.] A kind of silk twist or lace.

GIN. n. f. [from engine.]

1. A trap; a snare.
 As the day begins,
 With twenty gins we wil the small birds take,
 And pasture make. Sidney.

Which tau, through treason and deceitful gin,
 Hath slain fir Mordant. Spenser.

So strives the woodcock with the gin;
 So doth the cony struggle in the net. Shakspeare.

Be it by gins, by snares, by subtilty.
 If thou, who have but sense, can slun
 The engines that have them annoy'd;
 Little for me had reason done,
 If I could not thy gin avoid. Ben. Jonson.

I know thy trains,
 Though dearly to my cost; thy gins and toils
 No more on me have pow'r, their force is null'd. Milton.

He made a planetary gin,
 Which rats would run their own heads in,
 And come on purpose to be taken,
 Without th' expense of cheese and bacon. Hudibras.

Keep from flaying fougure thy skin,
 And ankle free from iron gin. Hudibras.

2. Any thing moved with screws, as an engine of torture.
 Typharus' joints were stretched on a gin. Spenser.

3. A pump worked by rotatory sails.
 A bituminous plate, alternately yellow and black, formed by water driving on the outside of the gin pump of Moftyn colpuits. Woodward.

4. [Contracted from GENEVA, which see.] The spirit drawn by distillation from juniper berries.

N° LXII.

5. A vagabond who pretends to foretell futurity, commonly by palmistry or phyllognomy.

The butler, though he is sure to lose a knife, a fork, or a spoon every time his fortune is told him, thus himself up in

10 G

This calls the church to deprecate our gin,
 And hurls the thunder of our laws on gin. Pope.
 There shall each alehouse, thee each gillhouse mourn,
 And answ'ring gin shops fourer sighs return. Pope.

GINGER. n. f. [sinzer, Latin; gingero, Italian.]

The flower consists of five leaves, which are shaped somewhat like those of the iris: these are produced in an head or club, each coming out of a separate leafy scale. The ovary afterwards becomes a triangular fruit, having three cells, which contains their seeds. Miller.

The root of ginger is of the tuberous kind, knotty, crooked, and irregular; of a hot, acrid, and pungent taste, though aromatic, and of a very agreeable smell. The Indians eat both the young shoots of the leaves and the roots themselves, cut small in their fallads, and make an excellent sweetmeat of them. Ginger is an excellent carminative and stomachick. Hill.

Or waiving ginger round the streets to go,
 And visit alehouse where ye first did grow. Pope.

GINGERBREAD. n. f. [ginger and bread.] A kind of farinaceous sweetmeat made of dough, like that of bread or biscuit, sweetened with treacle, and flavoured with ginger and some other aromatick feeds. It is sometimes gilt.

Art I had but one penny in the world, thou shouldst have it to buy gingerbread. Shakspeare.

Here currans there and gooseberries were spread,
 With the enticing gold of gingerbread. King.

'Tis a loss you are not here, to partake of three weeks frost, and eat gingerbread in a booth by a fire upon the Thames. Swift.

GINGERLY. adv. [I know not whence derived.] Cautiously; nicely.

What is't that you
 Took up to gingery? Shakspeare.

GINGERNESS. n. f. Niceness; tenderness. Dill.

GINGIVAL. adj. [gingive, Latin.] Belonging to the gums.

Whilst the Italians strive to cut a thread in their pronunciation between I and T, so, to sweeten it, they make the occlusio apulise, especially the gingival, softer than we do, giving a little of perverseness. Heldr.

TO GINGLE. v. n.

1. To utter a sharp clattering noise; to utter a sharp noise in quick succession.

The foot grows black that was with dirt embrown'd,
 And in thy pocket gingle halpence found. Gay.

Once, we cockles, beneath the patriot's cloak,
 From the crack'd bag the dripping guinea spoke,
 And gingle down the backflairs, told the crew,
 Old Cato is as erect a rogue as you. Pope.

2. To make an affected sound in periods or cadence.

TO GINGIE. v. n. To shake so that a sharp thrill clattering noise should be made.

Her infant grandame's whistle next it grew;
 The bells the gingles, and the whistle blew. Pope.

GINGLE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A thrill resounding noise.

2. Affection in the sound of periods.

GINGLYMUS. adj. [γινγλυμος and idus.] Resembling a ginglymus; approaching to a ginglymus.

The malleus lies along, fixed to the tympanum, and on the other end is joined to the incus by a double or gingymoid joint. Heldr.

GINGLYMUS. n. f. [ginglime, French.] A mutual indenting of two bones into each other's cavity, of which the elbow is an instance. Wifman.

GINKNET. n. f. [gimnet.] A nag; a mule; a degenerated breed. Hence, according to some, but I believe, erroneously, a Spanish genus, improperly written for gimnet.

GINSENG. n. f. [I suppose Chinense.] A root brought lately into Europe. It never grows to any great size, and is of a brownish colour on the outside, and somewhat yellowish within; and so pure and fine, that it seems almost transparent. It is of a very agreeable and aromatick smell, though not very strong. Its taste is acrid and aromatick, and has somewhat bitter in it. We have it from China; and there is of it in the same latitudes in America. The Chinese value this root so highly, that it sells with them for three times its weight in silver. The Asiatics in general think the gingeng almost an universal medicine. The virtues most generally believed to be in it are those of a restorative, and a cordial. The European physicians esteem it a good medicine in convulsions, vertiges, and all nervous complaints; and recommend it as one of the best restoratives known. Hill.

TO GIP. v. n. To take out the guts of herrings. Beiler.

GIPSY. n. f. [Corrupted from Egyptian; for when they first appeared in Europe they declared, and perhaps truly, that they were driven from Egypt by the Turks. They are now mingled with all nations.]

5. A vagabond who pretends to foretell futurity, commonly by palmistry or phyllognomy.

The butler, though he is sure to lose a knife, a fork, or a spoon every time his fortune is told him, thus himself up in the pantry with an old gipsy for above half an hour. Addison.

A frautick gipsy now, the house he haunts, Prior.

And in wild phrases speaks dissembled wants.

I, near you stile, three fallow gypsies met;

Upon my hand they cast a poring look;

Bid me beware, and thrice their heads they shook. Gay.

In this still labyrinth around her lie,

Spells, philters, globes, and spheres of palmistry;

A sigil in this hand the gipsy bears,

In th' other a prophetic sieve and sheers. Garth.

2. A reproachful name for a dark complexion.

Laura, to his lady, was but a kitchen-wench; Dido a dowdy; Cleopatra a gipsy; Helen and Hero hildings and har-lots. Shakespeare.

3. A name of slight reproach to a woman.

The widow play'd the gipsy, and so did her confidant too, in pretending to believe her. L'Estrange.

A slave I am to Clara's eyes:

The gipsy knows her pow'r, and flies. Prior.

GIRASOLE. n. f. [girafale, French.]

1. The herb turnip.

2. The opal stone.

TO GIRD. v. a. pret. girded, or girt. [gýrnan, Saxon.]

1. To bind round.

They sprinkled earth upon their heads, and girded their loins with sackcloth. 2 Mac.

2. To put on so as to surround or bind.

Cords of the bigness of packthread were fastened to bandages, which the workmen had girt round my neck. Swift.

3. To fasten by binding.

He girt his warlike harness about him. 1 Mac.

My bow and thunder, my almighty arms

Girt on, and sword upon thy puissant thigh.

No, let us rise at once, girt on our swords,

And, at the head of our remaining troops,

Attack the foe. Addison.

The combatant too late the field declines,

When now the sword is girded to his loins. Prior.

4. To invest.

Stoop then, and set your knee against my foot;

And in requerd of that duty done,

I gird thee with the valiant sword of York. Shakespeare.

5. To gird with apparel.

The Sun appear'd,

Girt with omnipotence. Milton.

6. To dress; to habit; to clothe.

I girded thee about with fine lincn, and I covered thee with silk. Ezek. xvi. 10.

Typhoeus then keeps the ward,

Girt in her languine gown, by night and day,

Observant of the souls that pass the downward way. Dryden.

7. To cover round as a garment.

These, with what skill they had, together fow'd,

To gird their waist: vain coverings, if to hide

Their guilt, and dreaded shame! Milton.

8. To reproach; to gibe.

Being mov'd, he will not spare to gird the gods. Shakespeare.

9. To furnish; to equip.

So to the coast of Jordan he directs

His easy steps, girded with snaky wiles. Milton.

10. To inclose; to incircle.

That Nyseian isle,

Girt with the river Triton, where old Cham

His Amalthea, and her florid foun

Young Bacchus, from his steplame Rhea's eye. Milton.

TO GIRD. v. n. To break a scornful jest; to gibe; to sneer.

Men of all sorts take a pride to gird at me: the brain of this foolish compounded clay, man, is not able to invent any thing that tends to laughter more than I invent, or is invented on me: I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men. Shakespeare.

GIRD. n. f. [from the verb.] A twitch; a pang: from the friction caused by a bandage or girdle drawn hard suddenly.

This word is now seldom used.

Sweet king! the bishop hath a kindly gird:

Fur shame, my lord of Winchester, relent. Shakespeare.

They give satisfaction to his mind, and his conscience by this means is freed from many fearful girds and twinges which the atheist feels. Tillotson.

He has the glory of his conscience, when he doth well, to set against the chinks and girds of it when he doth amiss.

Goodman.

GIRDER. n. f. [from gird] In architecture, the largest piece of timber in a floor. Its end is usually fastened into the summers, or breast summers, and the joists are framed in at one arm to the girders. Harris.

The girders are also to be of the same scantling the summers and ground-places are of, though the back girder need not be so strong as the front girder. Moxon.

These mighty girders which the fabrick bind,

Thence rise robust and vast in order join'd. Blackmore.

GIRDLE. n. f. [gýrbel, Saxon.]

1. Any thing drawn round the waist, and tied or buckled.

There will I make thee beds of roses,

With a thousand fragrant posies;

A cap of flowers, and a girdle,

Embroider'd all with leaves of myrtle.

Many conceive there is somewhat amiss, until they see on their girdle. Shakespeare.

On him his mantle, girdle, sword and bow,

On him his heart and soul he did bestow. Cam.

2. Enclosure; circumference.

Suppose within the girdle of these walls

Are now confin'd two mighty monarchies. Shakespeare.

3. The equator; the torrid zone.

Great breezes in great circles, such as are under the girdle

of the world, do refrigerate. Bar.

TO GIRDLER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To gird; to bind as with a girdle.

Lay the gentle babes, girdling one another

Within their innocent alabaster arms. Shakespeare.

2. To inclose; to shut in; to environ.

Those sleeping flocks,

That as a waist do girdle you about,

By this time from their fixed beds of lime

Had been dishabited. Shakespeare.

Let me look back upon thee, O thou wall,

That girdlest in those wolves! Shakespeare.

GIRDLER. n. f. [girdle and belt.] The belt that incloses

the waist.

Nor did his eyes less longingly behold

The girdle, with nails of burnish'd gold. Dryden.

GIRDLER. n. f. [from girdle.] A maker of girdles.

GIRE. n. f. [gyrus, Latin.] A circle described by any thing in motion. See GYRE.

GIRL. n. f. [About the etymology of this word there is much question: Meric Casaubon, as is his custom, draws a train of the same signification; Admiral from gyra, Latin, a prattler, or girella, Italian, a weathercock; from which it comes from herdella, We find, from which, girl, war- let is very easily deduced. Stinner imagines that the name, who used to call for a man, might likewise have called for a woman, though no such word is now found. Dr. Harris derives it most probably from the Hindick girla, a woman.

A young woman, or female child.

In the unfledg'd days was my wife a girl. Shakespeare.

And let it not displease thee, good Bianca,

For I will love thee ne'er the less, my girl. Shakespeare.

A weather-beaten lover, but once known,

Is sport for every girl to practise on. Dry.

Tragedy should blush as much to stoop

To the low mimic follies of a farce.

As a grave matron would to dance with girls. Johnson.

A boy, like thee, would make a kindly line;

But oh, a girl, like her, must be divine! Dryden.

GIRLISH. adj. [from girl.] Suiting a girl; youthful.

In her girlish age the kept sheep on the moor. Green.

GIRLISHLY. adv. [from girlish.] In a girlish manner.

TO GIRN. v. n. Seems to be a corruption of girn. It is still used in Scotland, and is applied to a crabbed, capricious, or peevish person. Dick.

GIRROCK. n. f. A kind of fish.

GIRT. part. pass. [from to gird.]

TO GIRT. v. a. [from gird.] To gird; to encompass; to encircle. Not proper.

In the dread ocean, undulating wide

Beneath the radiant line, that girts the globe,

The circling Typhon whirl'd from point to point. Johnson.

GIRT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A band by which the saddle or burthen is fast upon the horse.

Here lies old Hobson, death hath broke his girt;

And here, alas! hath laid him in the dirt. Milton.

2. A circular bandage.

The most common way of bandage is by the use of the girt

which girt hath a bolster in the middle, and the ends are twisted firmly together. Johnson.

GIRTH. n. f. [from gird.]

1. The band by which the saddle is fixed upon the horse.

Or the fiddle turn'd round, or the girth breaks

For low on the ground, woe for his sake, Brown Johnson.

The law is found.

Nor Pegasus could bear the load,

Along the high celestial road;

The steed oppress'd, would break his girth, Johnson.

To raise the lumber from the earth.

Mordanto gallops on alone;

The roads are with his followers strown;

'Tis breaks a girth, and that a bone. Johnson.

2. The compass measured by the girth, or enclosing bandage.

He's a lully jolly fellow that lives well, at least girth Johnson.

in the girth.

hands, or put a crown on his head, that almost must direct its conveyance. Lacte.

4. To pay as price or reward, or in exchange.

All that a man hath will he give for his life. J. b.

If you did know to whom I gave the ring,

If you did know for whom I gave the ring,

And would conceive for what I gave the ring,

And how unwillingly I left the ring,

You would abate the strength of your displeasure. Shakspeare.

He would give his nuts for a piece of metal, and exchange his sheep for shells, or wool for a sparkling pebble. Lacte.

5. To yield; not to withhold.

Philip, Alexander's father, gave sentence against a prisoner what time he was drowsy, and seemed to give small attention.

The prisoner, after sentence was pronounced, said, I appeal:

the king, somewhat fluster'd, said, To whom do you appeal?

The prisoner answered, From Philip, when he gave no ear, to Philip, when he shall give ear. Bacon.

Constantia accused herself for having so tamely given an ear to the proposal. Addison.

Nay, urg'd him to go on: the shallow fraud

Will ruin him. Rome.

11. To yield without resistance.

12. To permit; to commission.

Prepare

The due libation and the solemn pray'r;

Then give thy friend to shed the sacred wine. Pope.

13. To enable; to allow.

God himself requireth the lifting up of pure hands in prayers;

and hath given the world to understand, that the wicked,

although they cry, shall not be heard. Flucker.

Give me to know

How this foul rout began, who set it on. Shakspeare.

So some weak shoot, which else would poorly rise,

Jove's tree adopts, and lifts into the skies;

Through the new pupul foiling juices flow,

Thrust forth the gems, and give the flow'rs to blow. Tickell.

14. To pay.

The applause and approbation, most reverend for thy bricht-out line, I give to both your speeches. Shakspeare.

15. To utter; to vent; to pronounce.

So you must be the first that gives this sentence,

And he that suffers. Shakspeare.

The Rhodians, seeing their enemies turn their backs, gave a great shout in certion of them. Kenil.

Let the first honest discoverer give the word about, that

Wood's halpence have been offered, and caution the poor people not to receive them. Swift.

16. To exhibit; to express.

This influence gives the impossibility of an eternal existence in any thing essentially alterable or corruptible. Hale.

17. To exhibit as the product of a calculation.

The number of men being divided by the number of ships, gives four hundred and twenty-four men apiece. A-bathna.

18. To do any act of which the consequence reaches others.

As we desire to give no offence our selves, so neither shall we take any at the difference of judgment in others. Burnet.

19. To exhibit; to send forth as odours from any body.

In oranges the ripping of their rind giveth out their smell more. Bacon.

20. To add; to apply.

The Helots, of the other side, shutting their gates, gave themselves to bury their dead, to cure their wounds, and rest their wearied bodies. Sidney.

After men began to grow to number, the first thing we read they gave themselves into, was the tilling of the earth and the feeding of cattle. Hoster.

Groves and hill-altars were dangerous, in regard of the secret access which people superstitiously given might have always thereunto with ease. Holer.

The duke is virtuous, mild, and too well gives,

To dream on evil, or to work my downfall. Shakspeare.

Fear him not, Caesar, he's not dangerous:

He is a noble Roman, and well given. Shakspeare.

His name is Falstaff: if that man should be lowly given,

he deceives me; for, Harry, I see virtue in his looks. Shakspeare.

Hunialdes, the scourge of the Turks, was dead long before;

so was also Mathias: after whom succeeded others, give n all to pleasure and ease. Knell.

Though he was give n to pleasure, yet he was likewise desirous of glory. Bacon.

He that giveth his mind to the law of the Most High,

will seek out the wisdom of all the ancients. Ecclef.

prises, went immediately to the palace of Odin. Temple.

Men are given to this licentious humour of scoffing at personal blemishes and defects. L'Estrange.

Besides, he is too much given to horsey play in his railway;

and comes to battle like a dictator from the plough. Dryden.

I have some business of importance with her; but her husband is so horribly given to be jealous. Dryden.

What can I refuse to a man so charitably given? Dryden.

21. To resign; to yield up.

Finding ourselves in the midst of the greatest wilderness of waters, without victual, we gave ourselves for lost men, and prepared for death. Bacon.

Who say, I care not, those I give for lost;

And to instruct them, will not quit the coast. Field.

Virtue give n for lost,

Depress and overthrown, as seem'd;

Like that self-begot'n bird

In the Arabian woods imbost,

That no second knows, nor third,

And lay erewhile a holocaust,

From out her ashy womb now teem'd. Milton.

Since no deep within her gulph can hold

Immortal vigour, though oppress'd and fall'n,

I give not heav'n for lost. Milton.

For a man to give his name to Christianity in those days, was to fit himself a martyr. Smith.

Ours gives himself for gone; you've watch'd your time,

He fights this day unarm'd, without his rhyme. Dryden.

The parents, after a long search for the boy, gave him for drowned in one of the canals. Addison.

As the hinder feet of the horse stuck to the mountain, while the body reared up in the air, the poet with great difficulty kept himself from sliding off his back, in so much that the people gave him for gone. Addison.

22. To conclude; to suppose.

Whence came you here, O friend, and whither bound?

All gave you lost on far Cyclopean ground. Garth.

23. To Give away. To alienate from one's self; to make over to another; to transfer.

The more he got, the more he shew'd that he gave away to his new mistress, when he betrayed his promises to the former. Sidney.

If you shall marry,

You give away this hand, and that is mine;

You give away heav'n's vows, and those are mine;

You give away myself, which is known mine. Shakspeare.

Honest company, I thank you all,
That have beheld me give away myself
To this most patient, sweet, and virtuous wife. Shakspeare.
I know not how they sold themselves; but thou, like a kind fellow, gav'st thyself away gratis, and I thank thee for thee.

Shakspeare.
Love gives away all things, that so he may advance the interest of the beloved person. Taylor.

But we who give out native rights away,
And our enslav'd posterity betray,
Are now reduc'd to beg an alms, and go
On holidays to see a puppet-show. Dryden.
Alas, said I, man was made in vain! How is he given away to misery and mortality! Addison.

Theodosius arrived at a religious house in the city, where Constantia resided, and made himself one of the order, with a private vow never to inquire after Constantia, whom he looked upon as given away to his rival, upon the day on which their marriage was to have been solemnized. Addison.

Whatever we employ in charitable uses, during our lives, is given away from ourselves: what we bequeath at our death,
is given from others only, as our nearest relations. Atterbury.

34. To GIVE back. To return; to restore.
Till their vices perhaps give back all those advantages which their victories procured. Atterbury.

35. To GIVE forth. To publish; to tell.
Soon after it was given forth, and believed by many, that the king was dead. Hayward.

36. To GIVE the hand. To yield pre-eminence, as being subordinate or inferior.

Leisious being free from some inconveniences, wherunto sermons are more subject, they may in this respect no less take than in others they must give the hand, which betokeneth pre-eminence. Hosker.

37. To GIVE over. To leave; to quit; to cease.
Let novelty therefore in this give over endless contradictions, and let ancient customs prevail. Hosker.

It may be done rather than that be given over: Hosker.
Never give her over;

For scorn at first makes after love the more. Shakspeare.
If Daddemona will return me my jewels, I will give over my suit, and repent my unlawful solicitation. Shakspeare.
Abbedemeh, as one weary of the world, gave over all, and betook himself to a solitary life, and became monk. Knight.
All the soldiers, from the highest to the lowest, had solemnly sworn to defend the city, and not to give it over unto the last man. Knight.

To death's besuaming opium, as my only cure. Milton.
Those troops, which were levied, have given over the procedure of the war. Clarendon.

But worst of all to give her over,
'Tis she's as desperate to recover. Hudibras.

'Tis not amiss, e'er y' are giv'n o'er,
To try one desperate medicine more;
And where your case can be no worse,
The desperate'st is the wisest course. Hudibras.

A woman had a hen that laid every day an egg: she fancied that upon a larger allowance this hen might lay twice a day;
but the hen grew fat, and gave quite over laying. L'Estrange.
Many have given over their pursuits after fame, either from the disappointments they have met, or from their experience of the little pleasure which attends it. Addison.

28. To GIVE over. To add; to attach to.
Zelmene, govern and direct me; for I am wholly given o'er unto thee. Sidney.

When the Babylonians had given themselves over to all manner of vice, it was time for the Lord, who had set up that empire, to pull it down. Grew.

I used one thing ill, or gave myself so much over to it as to neglect what I owed either to him or the rest of the world. Temp'le.

29. To GIVE over. To conclude lost.
Since it is lawful to præsume upon them that are forsaken and given over, I will adventure to prescribe to you. Suckling.

The abbess, finding that the physicians had given her over, told her that Theodosius was just gone before her, and had sent her his benediction. Addison.

Her condition was now quite desperate, all regular physicians, and her nearest relations, having given her over. Abutnot.

Yet this false comfort never gives him o'er,
That, whilst he creeps, his vigorous thoughts can soar. Pope.

Not one foretells I shall recover;
But all agree to give me over. Swift.

30. To GIVE over. To abandon.
The duty of uniformity throughout all churches, in all manner of indifferent ceremonies, will be very hard, and therefore best to give it over. Hosker.

The cause, for which we fought and swore
So boldly, shall we now give o'er? Hudibras.

31. To GIVE out. To proclaim; to publish; to utter.

The fathers give out for a rule, that whatsoever Christ is said in scripture to have received, the same we ought to give only to the manhood of Christ. Hale.

It is given out, that, sleeping in my orchard,
A serpent stung me. So the whole ear of Denmark
Is, by a forged process of my death,
Rankly abused. Shakspeare.

One that gives out himself prince Florizel,
Son of Polixenes, with his princes. Shakspeare.

It hath been given out, by an hypocritical chit, who was the first matter of my ship, that I carried with me out of England twenty-two thousand of twenty-two billets per piece. Shakspeare.

He gave out general summons for the Assembly of his council for the wars. Hale.

The night was distinguished by the orders which he gave out to his army, that they should forbear all insulting of their enemies. Addison.

32. To GIVE out. To show in false appearance.
His givings out were of an infinite distance
From his true mean design. Shakspeare.

She that, so young, could give out such a form
To seal her father's eyes close as oak. Shakspeare.

33. To GIVE up. To resign; to quit; to yield.

For certain drops of salt your city Rome. Shakspeare.

The sun, breaking out with his cheerful beams, gave out many, before ready to give up the ghost for cold, and give comfort to them all. Shakspeare.

He found the lord Hopton in trouble for the loss of the regiment of foot at Alton, and with the unexpected assistance of the giving up of Arundel castle. Cromwell.

Let us give ourselves wholly up to Christ in heart and life. John.

Such an expectation will never come to pass; therefore I can give it up, and go and fret myself. Shakspeare.

I can give up to the historians of your country the names of so many generals and heroes which crowd their annals. John.
He declares himself to be now gave up to the emperor, a which he has given up the cause. John.

The leagues made between several states, gave up claim to the land in the other's possession, have, in common consent, given up their pretences to their natural right. John.

If they give them up to their reason, then they will give give up all truth and farther enquiry, and think there is such thing as certainty. John.

We should see him give up again to the wild content of nature, whatever was more than would supply the necessities of life. John.

Juba's surrender, since his father's death,
Would give up Africa into Caesar's hands,
And make him lord of half the burning zone. Addison.

Learn to be honest men, give up your leaders,
And pardon shall descend on all the rest. Addison.

A popish priest threatened to excommunicate a Nonconformist, if he did not give up to him the church book. Addison.

He saw the celestial deities acting in a conspiracy against him, and immediately gave up a cause which was so weak from all possibility of success. Addison.

An old gentleman, who had been engaged in an argument with the emperor, upon his friend's telling him he was tired, he would give up the question when he had the best; I am never ashamed, says he, to be confuted by one who is master of fifty legions. Addison.

He may be brought to give up the clearest evidence. Addison.
The constant health and longevity of men would give up
also, as a groundless conceit. Addison.

Have the physicians giv'n up all their hopes?
Cannot they add a few days to a monarch's life? Addison.

These people were obliged to demand peace, and give up to the Romans all their possessions in Sicily. Addison.

Every one who will not ask for the conduct of God in the study of religion, has just reason to fear he shall be left of God, and given up a prey to a thousand prejudices, that he shall be configned over to the follies of his own heart. Addison.

Give yourself up to some hours of leisure.
34. To GIVE up. To abandon.

If any be given up to believe lies, some must be left in up to tell them. Addison.

Our minds naturally give themselves up to every opinion which they are much accustomed to; and we always give up play, when followed with assiduity, engrosses the whole man. Addison.

Give up your fond paternal pride,
Nor argue on the weaker side. Addison.

A good poet no sooner communicates his works, but is imagined he is a vain young creature given up to the ambition of fame. Addison.

I am obliged at this time to give up my whole application to Homer.

Persons who, through misfortunes, chuse not to dress, should not, however, give up neatness.

35. To GIVE up. To deliver.

And Joab gave up the sum of the number of the people to the king.

His accounts were confused, and he could not then give them up.

To GIVE. v. n.

1. To rush; to fall on; to give the assault. A phrase merely French, and not worthy of adoption.

Your orders come too late, the fight's begun;

The enemy gives on with fury led.

Hannibal gave upon the Romans.

2. To relent; to grow moist; to melt or soften; to thaw.

Some things are harder when they come from the fire, and afterwards give again, and grow soft; as the crust of bread, biscuit, sweetmeats, and salt.

Only a sweet and virtuous soul,

Like season'd timber, never gives;

But though the whole world turn to coal,

Then chiefly lives.

Unless it is kept in a hot house, it will so give again, that it will be little better than raw malt.

Before you carry your large cocks in, open them once, and spread them: hay is apt to give in the cock.

3. To move. A French phrase.

Up and down he travels his ground,

Then nimbly shifts a thrust, then lends a wound;

Now back he gives, then rushes on again.

4. To GIVE in. To go back; to give way.

The charge was given with so well governed fury, that the left corner of the Scots battalion was enforced to give in.

5. To GIVE in to. [A French phrase.] To adopt; to embrace.

This is a geography particular to the medallists: the poets, however, have sometimes given in to it, and furnish us with very good light for the explication of it.

This consideration may induce a translator to give in to those general phrases, which have attained a veneration in our language from being used in the Old Testament.

The whole body of the people are either stupidly negligent, or else giving in with all their might to those very practices that are working their destruction.

6. To GIVE off. To cease; to forbear.

The punishment would be kept from being too much, if we gave off as soon as we perceived that it reached the mind.

7. To GIVE over. To cease; to act no more.

If they will speak to the purpose, they must give over, and stand upon such particulars only as they can shew we have either added or abrogated, otherwise than we ought, in the matter of church policy.

Neither hath Christ, thro' union of both natures, incurred the damage of either; left, by being born a man, we should think he hath given over to be God, or that because he continued God, therefore he cannot be man also.

Give not over to: to him again; intreat him, Kneel down before him, hang upon his gowls;

You are too cold.

The state of human actions is so variable, that to try things off, and never to give over, doth wonders.

Demetrius, king of Macedonia, had a petition offered him divers times by an old woman, and still answered he had no leisure; whereupon the woman said aloud, Why then give over to be king.

So Satan, whom repulse upon repulse Met ever, and to shameful silence brought,

Yet gives not over, though desperate of success.

Shall we kindle all this flame

Only to put it out again?

And must we now give over,

And only end where we begun?

In vain this mischief we have done,

If we can do no more.

It would be well for all authors, if they knew when to give over, and to desist from any farther pursuits after fame.

He coined again, and was forced to give over for the same reason.

8. To GIVE out. To publish; to proclaim.

Simon bewitched the people of Samaria, giving out that himself was some great one.

Julius Cæsar laid asleep Pompey's preparations, by a fame that he cunningly gave out how Cæsar's own soldiers loved him not.

Your ill-wishers will give out you are now going to quit your school.

9. To GIVE out. To cease; to yield.

We are the earth; and they,

Like moles within us, heave and cast about;

And 'till they foot and clutch their prey;

They never cool, much less give out.

No LXII.

Madam, I always believ'd you'd go stout,
That for twenty denials you would not give out.

10. To GIVE way. To yield; to not resist; to make room for.

Private respects, with him, gave way to the common good.

Perpetual pushing and assurance put a difficulty out of countenance, and make a seeming impossibility give way.

Scarce had he spoken when the cloud gave way;

The mists flew upward, and diffus'd in day.

His golden helm gives way with stony blows,

Batter'd and flat, and beaten to his brows.

GIVER. n. f. [from give.] One that gives; donor; benefactor; distributor; granter.

Well we may afford

Our givers their own gifts.

By thee how fairly is the giver now

Repaid! But gratitude in thee is lost

Long since.

I have not liv'd since first I heard the news;

The gift the guilty giver doth accuse.

Both gifts destructive to the givers prove;

Alike both lovers fall by those they love.

GIZZARD. n. f. [from gizzard, French; gigria, Latin.] It is sometimes called gizzard.

1. The strong muscular stomach of a fowl.

Fowls have two ventricles, and pick up stones to convey them into their second ventricle, the gizzard.

In birds there is no mastication in the mouth; but in such as are not carnivorous, it is immediately swallowed into the crop, a kind of antestomach, where it is moistened by some proper juice from the glands distilling in there, and thence transferred into the gizzards, or muscular stomach.

Flutt'ring there they nestle near the throne,

And lodge in habitations not their own;

By their high crops and corny gizzards known.

2. It is proverbially used for apprehension or conception of mind; as, he trats his gizzard, he harrales his imagination.

But that which does them greatest harm,

Their spiritual gizzards are too warm:

Which puts the overheated fots

In fevers still.

Satisfaction and restitution lie so curstly hard upon the gizzards of our publicans, that the blood in their veins is not half so dear to them as the treasure they have in their coffers.

GLACIATION. n. f. [from glacier, Latin.] Smoothness; baldness.

GLACIAL. adj. [glacial, French; glacialis, Latin.] Icy; made of ice; frozen.

To GLACIATE. v. n. [glaciet, Latin; glacier, French.] To turn into ice.

GLACIATION. n. f. [from glaciate.] The act of turning into ice; ice formed.

Ice is plain upon the surface of water, but round in hail, which is also a glaciation, and figured in its guttulous descent from the air.

GLACIS. n. f. [French.] In fortification, a sloping bank.

It is more especially taken for that which rangeeth from the parapet of the covered way to the level on the side of the field.

GLAD. adj. [glad, Saxon; glad, Danish.]

1. Cheerful; gay; in a state of hilarity.

He will be glad in his heart.

They blessed the king, and went unto their tents joyful and glad of heart.

2. Wearing a gay appearance; fertile; bright; showy.

The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them, and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose.

3. Pleased; elevated with joy. It has generally, sometimes at or with before the cause of gladness; perhaps it is most proper, when the cause of joy is something gained or possessed; and at or with, when it is some accident befallen himself or another.

I am glad to see your worship.

He hath an uncle in Messina will be very much glad of it.

He that is glad at calamities shall not be unpunished.

If he be my enemy, let him triumph; if he be my friend, he will be glad of my repentance.

The gaping wound gush'd out a crimson flood;

The Trojan, glad with sight of hostile blood,

His fauchion drew.

I would be glad to learn from those who pronounce that the human soul always thinks, how they know it.

4. Pleading; exhilarating.

Her conversation

More glad to me than to a miser money is.

5. Expressing gladness.

Hark! a glad voice the lonely desert cheers;

Prepare the way, a God, a God appears!

To GLAD. v. a. [from the adjective.] To make glad; to cheer; to exhilarate.

He saw rich nectar-thaws release the rigour
Of th' icy North; from frost-bound Atlas' hands
His adamantine fetters fall: green vigour Gladdens the Scythian rocks, and Lybian sands. Crahw.

It gladd me

To see so many virtues thus united,
To restore justice and dethrone oppression. Ottway.
Each drinks the juice that gladd the heart of man. Pope.
If justice Philips' collied head

Some frigid rhymes disburles,

And glad both babes and nurses. Swift.

To GLADDEN. v. a. [from glad.] To cheer; to delight; to make glad; to exhilarate.

Oh, he was all made up of love and charms!

Delight of every eye! When he appear'd,
A secret pleasure gladden'd all that saw him. Addison.

A kind of vital heat in the soul cheers and gladdens her,
when she does not attend to it. Addison.

GLADDEN, n. f. [from glad.] One that makes glad; one that gladdens; one that exhilarates.

Thou gladder of the mount of Cytheron,

Have pity, goddess. Dryden.

GLADE, n. f. [from glozan, to be hot, or to shine; whence the Danish glad, and the obsolete English gled, a red hot coal.] A lawn or opening in a wood. Lucan. It is taken for an avenue through a wood, whether open or shaded, and has therefore epithets of opposite meaning.

So flam'd his eyes with rage and rancorous ire;

But far within, as in a hollow glade,

Those glaring lamps were set, that made a dreadful shade. Spenser.

Lo where they spy'd, how in a gloomy glade

The lion sleeping lay in secret shade. Spenser.

O might I here

In solitude live savage, in some glade

Obscur'd, where high (still woods) impenetrable

To star or sun-light, spread their umbrage broad,

And brown as evening. Milton.

When any, favour'd of high Jove,

Chances to pass through this adventurous glade,

Swift as a spark of a glancing star

I shoot from heav'n to give him safe convey. Milton.

For noonday's heat are cloister arbours made,

And for fresh evening air the op'ner glade. Dryden.

There, interspers'd in lawns and opening glades,

Thin trees arise that shun each other's shades. Pope.

By the heroes armed shades,

Glut ring through the gloomy glades;

By the youths that dy'd for love,

Wand'ring in the myrtle grove,

Restore, restore Eurydice to life!

Oh, take the husband, or restore the wife! Pope.

GLADDEN, n. f. [from gladus, Latin, a sword.] Swordgrass: a

GLADDER, n. f. general name of plants that rise with a broad blade like sedge. Jurini.

GLADFULNESS, n. f. [from glad and fulness.] Joy; gladness.

And there him rests in riotous suffiance

Of all his gladfulness, and kindly joyance. Spenser.

GLADIATOR, n. f. [Latin; gladiatus, Fr.] A swordplayer;

a prizefighter.

Then whilst his foe each gladiator foils,

The atheist, looking on, enjoys the spoils. Denham.

Besides, in gratitude for such high matters,

Know I have vow'd two hundred gladiators. Dryden.

GLADLY, adv. [from glad.] Joyfully; with gayety; with meriment; with triumph; with exultation.

For his particular, I'll receive him gladly;

But not one follower. Shakespeare.

You are going to set us right; and 'tis an advantage every body will gladly see you engross the glory of. Blount to Pope.

GLADNESS, n. f. [from glad.] Cheerfulness; joy; exultation.

By such degrees the spreading gladness grew

In every heart, which fear had froze before:

The staiding streets with so much joy they view,

That with less grief the perith'd they implore. Dryden.

GLADNESS, adj. [from glad.]

1. Pleased; gay; delighted.

The highest angels to and fro descend,

From highest heaven in gladness company. Spenser.

The gladness ghouls in circling troops attend,

And with unwear'd eyes behold their friend:

Delight to hover near. Dryden.

2. Causing joy; having an appearance of gayety.

Each morn they wak'd me with a sprightly lay;

Of opening heav'n they sung a gladness day. Prior.

GLADNESS, adv. [from gladness.] With gayety and delight.

GLADNESS, n. f. [from gladness.] Gayety; showiness; delight.

GLASS, n. f. [glass, Saxon, amber; glar, Danish, glass; glair,

French; glacia, Latin.]

1. The white of an egg.

Take the glair of eggs, and strain it as short as water.

Peasbush on Dressing.

2. A kind of halbert.

To GLAIR, v. a. f. glairer, French; from the noun.] To smear with the white of an egg. This word is still used by the bookbinders.

GLANCE, n. f. [glantz, German, glitter.]

1. A sudden shoot of light or splendour.

His off'ring from propitious fire from heav'n

Consum'd with nimble glance, and grateful steam:

The other's not; for his was not sincere. Milton.

2. A stroke or dart of the beam of sight.

The aspects which procure love are not glances, but sudden glances and dartings of the eye. Keats.

There are of those sort of beauties which last but for a moment; some particularity of a violent passion, some graceful action, a smile, a glance of an eye, a disdaful look, and a look of gravity. Dryden.

3. A snatch of sight; a quick view.

The ample mind takes a survey of several objects with one glance. Blount.

To GLANCE, v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shoot a sudden ray of splendour.

He double blows about him fiercely laid,

That glancing fire out of the iron play'd,

As sparkles from the anvil eye,

When heavy hammers on the wedges are away'd. Spenser.

When through the gloom the glancing lightning by Heavy the rattling thunders roll on high. Keats.

2. To fly off in an oblique direction.

He has a little gall'd me, I confess;

But as the jest did glance away from me,

'Tis ten to one it maim'd you two outright. Shakespeare.

3. To strike in an oblique direction.

Pois'd in air, the jav'lin sent,

Through Paris' shield the forceful weapon went,

His corset pierces, and his garment rends,

And glancing downwards near his flank descends. Pope.

4. To view with a quick cast of the eye; to play the eye.

O' th' sudden up they rise and dance,

Then sit again, and sigh and glance;

Then dance again, and kiss. Keats.

Mighty dulness crown'd,

Shall take through Grub-street her triumphant rout;

And her Parnassus glancing o'er at once,

Behold a hundred fons, and each a dunc. Keats.

The cooing dove

Flies thick in am'rous chase, and wanton rolls

The glancing eye, and turns the changeful face. Keats.

5. To censure by oblique hints.

How can't thou thus, for shame, Titania,

Glance at my credit with Hippolitus,

Knowing I know thy love to Thebes? Shakespeare.

Some men glance and dart at others, by justifying themselves by negatives; as to say, this I do not. Keats.

I have never glanced upon the late designed procession of holiness and their attendants, notwithstanding it might have afforded matter to many ludicrous speculations. Keats.

It was objected against him that he had written verse, wherein he glanced at a certain reverend doctor, famous for his dulness. Keats.

To GLANCE, v. a. To move nimbly; to shoot obliquely.

Glancing an eye of pity on his losses,

Enough to press a royal merchant down. Keats.

GLANCINGLY, adv. [from glance.] In an oblique manner; transiently.

Sir Richard Hawkins hath done something in a brokenly and glancingly, intending chiefly a discourse of his own voyage. Keats.

GLAND, n. f. [glans, Latin; gland, French.]

All the glands of a human body are reduced to two infer, viz. conglobate and conglomerate. A conglobate gland is a little smooth body, wrapt up in a fine skin, by which it is separated from all the other parts, only admitting an artery and nerve to pass in, and giving way to a vein and excretory canal to come out: of this sort are the glands in the brain, the labial glands, and testes. A conglomerate gland is composed of many little conglobate glands, all tied together, and wrapt up in the common tunicle or membrane. Keats.

I observed the abscess to have begun deep in the body of the glands. Keats.

The glands, which o'er the body spread,

Fine complicated clues of nervous thread,

Involv'd and twined with th' arterial duct,

The rapid motion of the blood obstruct. Keats.

GLANDERS, n. f. [from glans] In a horse, is the name of a corrupt matter from the nose, which differs in colour according to the degree of the malignity, being white, yellow, green, or black. Keats.

His horse is posset with the glanders, and like to mope in the chine. Shakespeare.

GLAND'FEROUS. adj. [glans and fero, Latin.] Bearing mast; bearing acorns, or fruit like acorns.

The beech is of two sorts, and numbered amongst the glandiferous trees. Martiner.

GLANDULE. n. f. [glandula, Latin; glandule, Fr.] A small gland serving to the secretion of humours.

Nature hath provided several glandules to separate this juice from the blood, and no less than four pair of channels to convey it into the mouth, which are called ductus salivales. Ray.

GLANDULOSITY. n. f. [from glandulosus.] A collection of glands.

In the upper parts of worms are found certain white and oval glandulosityes. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

GLANDULOUS. adj. [glandulosus, Latin; glanduleux, Fr. from glandule.] Pertaining to the glands; subsisting in the glands; having the nature of glands.

There are no testicles, or parts official unto generation, but glandulous substances, that hold the nature of emundatories. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Such constitutions must be subject to glandulous tumours and ruptures of the lymphatick, and all the diseases thereon dependant. Arbutnot.

TO GLARE. v. n. [glarren, Dutch.]

1. To shine so as to dazzle the eyes.

After great light, if you come suddenly into the dark, or, contrariwise, out of the dark into a glaring light, the eye is dazzled for a time, and the sight confused. Bacon.

His glaring eyes with angry's venom swell, And like the brand of foul Alecho flame. Fairfax.

He is every where above conceits of grammatick wit, and gross hyperboles: he maintains majesty in the midst of plainness; he shines, but glares not; and is stately without ambition. Dryden.

The court of Cæcus shines reveal'd to fight; The cavern glares with new admitted light. Dryden.

Beholds this man in a false glaring light, Which conquest and success have thrown upon him. Addis.

2. To look with fierce piercing eyes.

Avant, and quit my fight! let the earth hide thee! Thou hast no speculation in those eyes, Which thou dost glare with. Shakespeare.

Look, how pale he glares! His form and cause conjoin'd, preaching to stones, Would make them capable. Shakespeare.

Now friends no more, nor walking hand in hand; But when they met they made a fury band, And glar'd like angry lions, as they pass'd, And with'd that ev'ry look might be their last. Dryden.

3. To shine ostentatiously, or with too much labour'd lustre.

The most glaring and notorious passages are none of the finest, or most correct. Felton.

TO GLARE. v. a. To shoot such splendour as the eye cannot bear.

One spirit in them rul'd, and every eye Glar'd lightning, and shot forth pernicious fire Among th' accurs'd, that wither'd all their strength. Milton.

GLARE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Overpowering lustre; splendour, such as dazzles the eye.

The frame of burnish'd steel that cast a glare From far, and seem'd to thaw the freezing air. Dryden.

I have grieved to see a person of quality gliding by me in her chair at two o'clock in the morning, and looking like a spectre amidst a glare of flambeaux. Addison.

Here in a grotto, shelter'd close from air, And screen'd in shades from day's detected glare, She sighs for ever. Pope.

2. A fierce piercing look.

About them round, A lion now he stalks with fiery glare. Milton.

GLA'REOUS. adj. [glairicus, Fr. glareus, Latin, from glair.] Consisting of viscous transparent matter, like the white of an egg.

GLA'RINO. adj. Applied to any thing very shocking: as, a glaring crime.

GLASS. n. f. [glæs, Saxon; glaz, Dutch, as Præzer imagines from glaz, British, green. In Erse it is called klann, and this primarily signifies clean or clear, being so denominated from its transparency.]

1. An artificial substance made by fusing fixed salts and flint or sand together, with a vehement fire.

The word glass cometh from the Belgick and High Dutch: glaz, from the verb glazian, which signifies amongst them to shine; or perhaps from glacius in the Latin, which is ice, whose colour it resembles. Pencham.

Glass is thought so compact and firm a body that it is indestructible by art or nature, and is also of so close a texture that the subtillest chymical spirits cannot pervade it. Boyle.

Show'rs of granadoes rain, by sudden burst

Disploding murd'rous bowels, fragments of steel And flowers, and glaz and nitrous grain adust. Philips.

2. A glaz vessel of any kind.

I'll see no more; And yet the eighth appears, who bears a glaz Which shews me many more. Shakespeare.

3. A looking-glass; a mirror.

He was the mark and glaz, copy and book, That fashion'd others. Shakespeare.

He spreads his subtle nets from fight, With twinkling glaz, to betray The larks that in the methes light. Dryden.

4. An Hour Glass. A glaz used in measuring time by the flux of sand.

Were my wife's liver Infected as her life, she would not live The running of one glaz. Shakespeare.

5. A cup of glaz used to drink in.

To this last costly treat, That swallow'd so much treasure, and like a glaz Did break it th' rindling. Shakespeare.

When they heart Dilates with fervent joys, and eager soul Prompts to pursue the sparkling glaz, before 'Tis time to slum it. Philips.

6. The quantity of wine usually contained in a glaz; a draught.

While a man thinks one glaz more will not make him drunk, that one glaz hath disabled him from well discerning his present condition. Taylor.

The first glaz may pass for health, the second for good-humour, the third for our friends; but the fourth is for our enemies. Temple.

7. A perspective glaz.

Like those who have survey'd the moon by glaz, I can only tell of a new and shining world above us; but not relate the riches and glories of the place. Dryden.

GLASS. adj. Vitreous; made of glaz.

Get thee glaz eyes; And, like a fcurvy politician, seem To see the things thou dost not. Shakespeare.

Glass bottles are more fit for this second shining than those of wood. Martiner.

TO GLASS. v. a.

1. To see as in a glaz; to represent as in a glaz or mirror.

Methinks I am partaker of thy passion, And in thy case do glaz mine own debility. Sidney.

2. To case in glaz.

Methought all his senses were lockt in his eye, As jewels in crystal for some prince to buy; Who tender'd their own worth, from whence they were glaz'd. Shakespeare.

Did point out to buy them, along as you pass. Shakespeare.

3. To cover with glaz; to glaze.

I have observed little grains of silver to lie hid in the small cavities, perhaps glaz'd over by a vitrifying heat, in crucibles wherein silver has been long kept in fusion. Boyle.

GLA'SFURNACE. n. f. [glaz and furnace.] A furnace in which glaz is made by liquefaction.

If our dreamer pleases to try whether the glowing heat of a glaz-furnace be barely a wandering imagination in a drowsy man's fancy, by putting his hand into it, he may perhaps be awakened into a certainty that it is something more than bare imagination. Lucke.

GLA'SGAZING. adj. [glaz and gazing.] Fustial; often contemplating himself in a mirror.

A whorlon, glaz-gazing, superflerviceable, fustial rogue. Shakespeare's King Lear.

GLA'SGRINDER. n. f. [glaz and grinder.] One whose trade is to polish and grind glaz.

The glaz-grinders complain of the trouble they meet with. Boyle.

GLA'SHOUSE. n. f. [glaz and houz.] A house where glaz is manufactured.

I remember to have met with an old Roman Mosaic, composed of little pieces of clay half vitrified, and prepared at the glaz-houses. Addison.

GLA'SSMAN. n. f. [glaz and man.] One who sells glaz.

The profit of *glaz*es consists only in a small preient made by the glaz-man. Swift.

GLA'SSMETAL. n. f. [glaz and metal.] Glass in fusion.

Let proof be made of the incorporating of copper or brass with glaz-metal. Bacon.

GLA'SSWORK. n. f. [glaz and work.] Manufactory of glaz.

The crystalline Venice glaz is a mixture, in equal portions, of stones brought from Pavia, and the ashes of a weed called kali, gathered in a desert between Alexandria and Rosetta; and is by the Egyptians used first for fuel, and then they crush the ashes into lumps like a stone, and so sell them to the Venetians for their glaz-works. Bacon.

GLA'SSWORT. n. f. [salicornia, or saltwort.]

It hath an apetalous flower, wanting the empalement; for the stamina or chives, and the embryos grow on the extreme part of the leaves: these embryos afterward become pods or bladders, which for the most part contain one seed. The species are two. These plants grow on the sea-coasts in many parts of Europe, and upon the shores in several places of England which are washed every tide with the salt water. The inhabitants, near the sea-coast where these plants grow, cut them up toward the latter end of Summer, when they are fully grown; and, after having dried them in the sun, they burn them for their ashes, which are used in making of glass and soap. These herbs are by the country people called kelp, and are promiscuously gathered for use. From the ashes of these plants is extracted the salt called sal kali, or alkali, much used by the chymists.

For the fine glass we use the purest of the finest sand, and the ashes of chalk or glasswort; and for the coarser or green sort, the ashes of brake or other plants. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

GLASSY. adj. [from glass.]

1. Made of glass; vitreous.

In the valley near mount Carmel in Judea there is a sand, which, of all others, hath most affinity with glass; inasmuch as other minerals laid in it turn to a glassy substance. Bacon.

2. Resembling glass, as in smoothness or lustre, or brittleness.

Man! proud man!

Drest in a little brief authority,
Most ignorant of what he's most assur'd:
His glassy essence, like an angry ape,
Plays such fantastic tricks before high heav'n,
As makes the angels weep. Shakspeare.

There is a willow grows aslant a brook,
That shows his hoary leaves in the glassy stream. Shakspeare.
The magnet attracteth the shining or glassy powder brought from the Indies, usually employed in writing-dust. Brown.

Whose womb produc'd the glassy ice? Who bred

The hoary frosts that fall on Winter's head? Sandys.

A hundred sweets,

With stretching oars, the glassy deep. Dryden.

GLA'STONBURY ThORN. n. f. A species of MEDLAR, which ice. This species of thorn produces some bunches of flowers in winter, and flowers again in the spring, and in no other respect differs from the common hawthorn. Miller.

GLAUCOMA. n. f. [γλαυκωμα; glaucoma, French.] A fault in the eye, which changes the crystalline humour into a greyish colour, without detriment of sight, and therein differs from what is commonly understood by suffusion. Quincy.

The glaucoma is no other disease than the cataract. Shakspeare.
GLAIVE. n. f. [glaiue, French; glais, a hook, Welsh. Glaiue is Eric for a broad sword.] A broad sword; a falchion.

Two hundred Greeks came next in fight well try'd,

Not surely arm'd in steel or iron strong,

But each a glaive had brand by his side. Fairfax.

When zeal, with aged clubs and glaives,

Gave chase to rockets and white flaves, Hudibras.

TO GLAVER. v. n. [glave, Welsh, flattery; glaen, Saxon, to flatter. It is still retained in Scotland.] To flatter; to wheedle. A low word.

Kingdoms have their distempers, intermissions, and paroxysms, as well as natural bodies; and a glaucing council is as dangerous on the one hand as a wheedling priest, or a flattering physician is on the other. L'Estrange.

TO GLAZE. v. a. [To glass, only accidentally varied.]

1. To furnish with windows of glass.

Let there be two delicate cabinets daintily paved, richly hanged, and glazed with crystalline glass. Bacon.

2. To cover with glass, as potters do their earthen ware; [from the French glaiser, argilla.]

3. To overlay with something shining and pellucid.

Sorrow's eye, glaz'd with blinding tears,

Divides one thing entire to many objects. Shakspeare.

The reason of one man operates on that of another in all true oratory; wherein though with other ornaments he may glaze and brandish the weapons, yet is it found reason that carries the stroke home. Greene.

White, with other strong colours, with which we paint that which we intend to glaze, are the life, the spirit, and the lustre of it. Dryden.

GLAZIER. n. f. [Corrupted from glazier, or glazier, of glais.] One whose trade is to make glass windows. Other manufacturers of glass are otherwise named.

Into rabbits the several panes of glasswork are set, and fastened by the glazier. Milton.

The dextrous glazier strong returns the bound,

And ginging fables on the penthouse fount. Gay.

GLEAM. n. f. A buzzard hawk; a kite. It retains that name in Scotland.

GLEAM. n. f. [geloma, Saxon.] Sudden shoot of light;

lustre; brightness.

Then was the fair Dodonian tree far seen

Upon seven hills to spread his gladsome gleam;

And conquers bedecked with his green,

Along the banks of the Ausonian stream. Spenser.

At last a gleam

Of dawning light turn'd thitherward in haste
His travell'd steps.

As I bent down to look just opposite,
A shape within the wat'ry gleam appear'd,

Bending to look on me.

Mine is a gleam of bliss, too hot to last;

Wat'ry it shines, and will be soon o'ercast.

We ken them from afar; the setting fun

Plays on their shining arms and burnish'd helmets,

And covers all the field with gleams of fire.

In the clear azure gleam the flocks are seen,

And floating forests paint the waves with green.

Nought was seen, and nought was heard,

Around the dreary coast,

But dreadful gleams

Fires that glow,

Shrieks of woe.

TO GLEAM. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shine with sudden conflagration.

Observant of approaching day,

The meek-eyed dawn appears, mother of dawn,

At first faint gleaming in the dappled east.

Ye gleamings of departed peace

Shine out your last. Thomson.

2. To shine.

On each hand the gushing waters play

And down the rough cascade white dashing fall,

Or gleam in lengthen'd vista's through the trees. Thomson.

GLEAMY. adj. [from gleam.] Flashing; during sudden conflagrations of light.

In brazen arms, that cast a gleamy ray,

Swift through the town the warrior bends his way. Pope.

TO GLEAN. v. a. [gleaner, French, as Somer gleaner, gleaner.]

1. To gather what the gatherers of the harvest have left behind.

She came and gleaned in the field after the reaper. Ruth.

Cheap conquest for his following friends remain'd;

He reap'd the field, and they but only reap'd. Dryden.

She went, by hard necessity compell'd,

To glean Palæmon's fields. Thomson.

2. To gather any thing thinly scattered.

Gather

So much as from occasions you may glean,

If aught, to us unknown, afflicts him thus. Shakspeare.

That goodness

Of gleaming all the land's wealth into one,

Into your own hands, card'nal, by extortion. Field.

They gleaned of them in the highways five thousand. Jud. ii. 43.

But Argive chiefs, and Agamemnon's train,

When his reluctant arms flash'd through the dusky plain,

Fled from his well known face with wond'ring fear;

As when his thundering sword and pointed spear

Drove headlong to their ships, and gleam'd the routed rear. Dryden.

3. In the knowledge of bodies we must be content to gain what we can from particular experiments; since we cannot from a discovery of their real essences, grasp at a time whole sheaves, and in bundles comprehend the nature and properties of whole species together. Locke.

GLEAM. n. f. [from the verb.] Collection made haphazardly by slow degrees.

Plains, meads, and orchards all the day he glaz'd

The gleam of yellow thyme distend his thighs: Dryden.

He spoils the saffron.

GLEAMER. n. f. [from gleam.]

1. One who gathers after the reapers.

For still the world prevail'd, and its dread laugh

Which scarce the firm philosopher can scorn,

Should his heart own a gleamer in the field. Thomson.

2. One who gathers any thing slowly and laboriously.

An ordinary coffee-house gleamer of the city is an exact statesman, and as much superior to him, as a man conversant about the court is to a shopkeeper. Locke.

GLEAMING. n. f. [from gleam.] The act of gleaming, or thing gleamed.

There shall be as the shaking of an olive-tree, and as the gleaning of grapes when the vintage is done. Isaiah.

The orphan and widow are members of the same common family, and have a right to be supported out of the incomes of it, as the poor Jews had to gather the gleamings of the rich man's harvest. Deuteronomy.

GLEBE. n. f. [gleba, Latin.]

1. Turf; soil; ground.

Fertile of corn the glebe, of oil and wine,

With herds the pastures throng'd, with flocks the hills. Milton.

Mark well the flowing almonds in the wood;

If od'rous blooms the bearing branches load,

The glebe will answer to the lylian reign,

Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain. Dryden.

Sleeping vegetables lie,

'Till the glad funnoms of a genial ray

Unbinds the gl'ly, and calls them out to day.

2. The land possid'd as part of the revenue of an ecclesiastical benefice.

The ordinary living or revenue of a parsonage is of three sorts: the one in land, commonly called the glebe; another in tithes, which is a part of our gods rendered to God; and the third, in other offerings bestowed upon God and his church by the people.

A tithing done on a parson's glebe land, which is a freehold, cannot be tried in a spiritual court.

Many parishes have not an inch of glebe.

GLE'BOUS. a. j. [from gl'be.] Turfy.

GLE'BY. adj. [from gl'be.] Turfy; perhaps in the following passage fat or fruitful, if it has indeed any meaning.

Pernicious flattery! thy malignant seeds

In an ill hour, and by a fatal hand

Sadly diffus'd o'er virtue's gl'ly land,

With rising pride amidst the corn appear,

And choke the hopes and harvest 'till the year.

GLEBE. n. f. [gl'ba-hee, Saxon.] A kite.

Ye shall not eat the glebs, the kite, and the vulture.

GLEE. n. f. [gl'ee, Saxon.] Joy; merriment; gavity. It anciently signified mickle played at feasts. It is not now used, except in ludicrous writing, or with some mixture of irony and contempt.

She marcheth home, and by her takes the knight,

Whom all the people follow wth great glee.

Many wayfarers make themselves glee, by putting the inhabitants in mind of their privilege; who again foretell not to baffle them with perfume.

And his sportive limbs,

This way and that convolv'd, in friskful glee

Their frolics play.

Is Blouzclinda dead? Farewell my g'ee!

No happiness is now reserv'd for me

GLEED. n. f. [from gl'ean, Saxon, to glow.] A hot glowing coal. A provincial and obsolete word.

GLEEFUL. a. j. [gl'ee and full.] Gay; merry; cheerful.

My lovely Aaron, wherefore look'st thou sad,

When every thing doth make a gleeful boat?

GLIEK. n. f. [gl'ie, Saxon.] Mulick, or musician.

What will you give us?—No money, but the gl'ie: I will give you the minstrel.

GLEEK. v. n. [gl'ye, in Saxon, is a mimic or a juit.

1. To sneer; to gibe; to droll upon.

I can gl'ie upon occasion.

I have seen you g'ieing or galling at this gentleman twice or thrice.

2. In Scotland it is still retained, and signifies to fool or spend time idly, with something of mimicry or drollery.

3. To GLEEK. v. n. To flout with heat or relish. I know not the original notion of this word: it may be of the same race with glow or with gleam.

Those who labour

The sweaty forge, who edge the crooked cythe,

Bend flousshen steel, and harden gl'ing armour,

Acknowledge Vulcan's aid.

GLEE'V. n. f. [It is written by Stion r gl'it, and derived from gl'ean, Saxon, to run softly.] A fanious ooze; a thin ichor running from a sore.

There then lay a hard dry echer, without either matter or gl'et.

GLEET. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To drip or ooze with a thin fanious liquor.

His thumb being inflamed and swelled, I made an incision into it to the bone: this not only bled, but gl'et'd a few drops.

2. To run slowly.

Vapours may be raised in the fun in such quantities as are sufficient to make clouds, which are carried up and down the atmosphere, 'till they hit against the sides of the more mountainous places of the globe, and by this concussion are condensed, and so gl'et down the rocky caverns of these mountains, whole inner parts, being hollow and stony, afford them a basin.

GLE'ETV. adj. [from gl'et.] Ichory; thinly fanious.

If the flesh lose its ruddiness, and the matter change to be thin and gl'et, you may suspect it corrupting.

GLE'N. n. f. [gl'ean, Eric.] A valley; a dale; a depression between two hills.

From me his madding mind is flart,

And woe's the widow's daughter of the gl'ean.

GLEW. n. f. [gl'ew, Latin.] A vitous cement made by dissolving the skins of animals in boiling water, and drying the gelly.

GLIB. adj. [from gl'ib. Stion r.]

1. Smooth; slippery; so formed as to be easily moved.

Liqui bodies have nothin' to sustain their parts, nor any thing to cement them: the parts being gl'ib and continually in motion, fall off from one another, which way soever gravity inclines them.

Habbakkuk brought him a smooth strong rope, compactly twisted together, with a noose that slid as gl'ib as a bird-catcher's gin.

2. Smooth; voluble.

I want that gl'ib and oily art

To speak and purpose not, since what I well intend,

I'll do't before I speak.

There was never so much gl'ib nonsense put together in well founding English.

Now Carl his shop from rubbish drains;

Three genuine tomes of Swift's Remains:

And then, to make them pass the gl'ib,

Revi'd by Tibbald More, and Cibber.

Be sure he's a fine spoken man;

Do but hear on the clergy how gl'ib his tongue ran.

GLIB. n. f.

They have another custom from the Scythians, the wearing of mantles and long gl'ib; which is a thick curled bush of hair hanging down over their eyes, and monstrously disguising them.

GLIN. v. a. [from the adjective.] To castrate.

I'll geld them all: fourteen they shall not see,

To bring false generations; they are coheirs,

And I had rather gl'ib myself than they

Should not produce fair issue.

GLIBLY. adv. [from gl'ib.] Smoothly; volubly.

Many who would startle at an oath, whose stomachs as well as consciences recoil at an obscenity, do yet slide gl'ibly into a detraction.

GLIBNESS. n. f. [from gl'ib.] Smoothness; slipperiness.

A polish'd ice-like gl'ibness doth enfold

The rock.

The tongue is the most ready for motion of any member, needs not so much as the flexure of a joint, and by access of humours acquires a gl'ibness too, the more to facilitate its moving.

GLIDE. v. n. [gl'ide, Saxon; gliden, Dutch.]

1. To flow gently and silently.

By East, among the dusky vallies, glide

The silver streams of Jordan's crystal flood.

Broke by the jutting land on either side,

In double streams the briny waters glide.

Just before the confines of the wood,

The gl'iding Lethe leads her silent flood.

Where stray the mules, in what lawn or grove?

In those fair fields where sacred liss glide,

Or else where Cam his winding vales divides.

2. To pass gently and without tumult.

Ye gl'iding ghosts, permit me to relate

The mystick wonders of your silent fate.

3. To move swiftly and smoothly along.

It is one of mean affairs

May plot it in a week, why may not I

Gl'ide thither in a day?

Shoals of fish, with fins and shining scales,

Gl'ide under the green wave.

He trembl'd every limb, and felt a smart

As if cold steel had gl'ided through his heart.

All things are beheld as in a hasty motion, where the objects only gl'ide before the eye and disappear.

GLIDE. n. f. [from the verb.] Lapse; act or manner of passing smoothly.

About his neck

A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,

Who, with her head nimble in threats, approach'd

The opening of his mouth; but suddenly

Seeing Orlando it unlik'd it itself,

And with indented glides did slip away

Into a bush.

GLIDER. n. f. [from glide.] One that glides.

The glance into my heart did glide;

Hey ho the glider!

Therewith my soul was sharply gride,

Such wounds found waken wider.

GLIKE. n. f. [gl'ig, Saxon. See GLEEK.] A sneer; a scoff; a rout. Not now in use.

Now where's the ballard's braves, and Charles his gl'ike?

GLIMMER. v. n. [gl'immer, Danish, to shine; glimmen, Dutch, to glow.]

1. To shine faintly.

The west yet glimmers with some streaks of day.

The truth appears so naked on my side,

That any purblind eye may find it out.

—And on my side it is so well apparel'd,

So clear, so shining, and so evident,

That it will glimmer through a blind man's eye.

Often in glimmering bowers and glades

He met her.

GLEE. n. f. [gl'ee, Saxon.] Joy; merriment; gavity. It anciently signified mickle played at feasts. It is not now used, except in ludicrous writing, or with some mixture of irony and contempt.

She marcheth home, and by her takes the knight,

Whom all the people follow wth great glee.

Many wayfarers make themselves glee, by putting the inhabitants in mind of their privilege; who again foretell not to baffle them with perfume.

And his sportive limbs,

This way and that convolv'd, in friskful glee

Their frolics play.

Is Blouzclinda dead? Farewell my g'ee!

No happiness is now reserv'd for me

GLEED. n. f. [from gl'ean, Saxon, to glow.] A hot glowing coal. A provincial and obsolete word.

GLEEFUL. a. j. [gl'ee and full.] Gay; merry; cheerful.

My lovely Aaron, wherefore look'st thou sad,

When every thing doth make a gleeful boat?

GLIEK. n. f. [gl'ie, Saxon.] Mulick, or musician.

What will you give us?—No money, but the gl'ie: I will give you the minstrel.

GLEEK. v. n. To flout with heat or relish. I know not the original notion of this word: it may be of the same race with glow or with gleam.

Those who labour

The sweaty forge, who edge the crooked cythe,

Bend flousshen steel, and harden gl'ing armour,

Acknowledge Vulcan's aid.

GLEE'V. n. f. [It is written by Stion r gl'it, and derived from gl'ean, Saxon, to run softly.] A fanious ooze; a thin ichor running from a sore.

There then lay a hard dry echer, without either matter or gl'et.

GLEET. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To drip or ooze with a thin fanious liquor.

His thumb being inflamed and swelled, I made an incision into it to the bone: this not only bled, but gl'et'd a few drops.

2. To run slowly.

Vapours may be raised in the fun in such quantities as are sufficient to make clouds, which are carried up and down the atmosphere, 'till they hit against the sides of the more mountainous places of the globe, and by this concussion are condensed, and so gl'et down the rocky caverns of these mountains, whole inner parts, being hollow and stony, afford them a basin.

GLE'ETV. adj. [from gl'et.] Ichory; thinly fanious.

If the flesh lose its ruddiness, and the matter change to be thin and gl'et, you may suspect it corrupting.

GLE'N. n. f. [gl'ean, Eric.] A valley; a dale; a depression between two hills.

From me his madding mind is flart,

And woe's the widow's daughter of the gl'ean.

GLEW. n. f. [gl'ew, Latin.] A vitous cement made by dissolving the skins of animals in boiling water, and drying the gelly.

GLIB. adj. [from gl'ib. Stion r.]

1. Smooth; slippery; so formed as to be easily moved.

Liqui bodies have nothin' to sustain their parts, nor any thing to cement them: the parts being gl'ib and continually in motion, fall off from one another, which way soever gravity inclines them.

Habbakkuk brought him a smooth strong rope, compactly twisted together, with a noose that slid as gl'ib as a bird-catcher's gin.

2. Smooth; voluble.

I want that gl'ib and oily art

To speak and purpose not, since what I well intend,

I'll do't before I speak.

There was never so much gl'ib nonsense put together in well founding English.

And then, to make them pass the gl'ib,

Revi'd by Tibbald More, and Cibber.

Be sure he's a fine spoken man;

Do but hear on the clergy how gl'ib his tongue ran.

GLIB. n. f.

They have another custom from the Scythians, the wearing of mantles and long gl'ib; which is a thick curled bush of hair hanging down over their eyes, and monstrously disguising them.

GLIN. v. a. [from the adjective.] To castrate.

I'll geld them all: fourteen they shall not see,

To bring false generations; they are coheirs,

And I had rather gl'ib myself than they

Should not produce fair issue.

GLIBLY. adv. [from gl'ib.] Smoothly; volubly.

Many who would startle at an oath, whose stomachs as well as consciences recoil at an obscenity, do yet slide gl'ibly into a detraction.

GLIBNESS. n. f. [from gl'ib.] Smoothness; slipperiness.

A polish'd ice-like gl'ibness doth enfold

The rock.

The tongue is the most ready for motion of any member, needs not so much as the flexure of a joint, and by access of humours acquires a gl'ibness too, the more to facilitate its moving.

GLIDE. v. n. [gl'ide, Saxon; gliden, Dutch.]

1. To flow gently and silently.

By East, among the dusky vallies, glide

The silver streams of Jordan's crystal flood.

Broke by the jutting land on either side,

In double streams the briny waters glide.

Just before the confines of the wood,

The gl'iding Lethe leads her silent flood.

Or else where Cam his winding vales divides.

2. To pass gently and without tumult.

Ye gl'iding ghosts, permit me to relate

The mystick wonders of your silent fate.

3. To move swiftly and smoothly along.

It is one of mean affairs

May plot it in a week, why may not I

Gl'ide thither in a day?

Shoals of fish, with fins and shining scales,

Gl'ide under the green wave.

He trembl'd every limb, and felt a smart

As if cold steel had gl'ided through his heart.

All things are beheld as in a hasty motion, where the objects only gl'ide before the eye and disappear.

GLIDE. n. f. [from the verb.] Lapse; act or manner of passing smoothly.

About his neck

A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,

Who, with her head nimble in threats, approach'd

The opening of his mouth; but suddenly

Seeing Orlando it unlik'd it itself,

And with indented glides did slip away

Into a bush.

GLOBE fifth. n. f. A kind of orbicular fish.

GLOBE fifth. n. f. [Globulosa annulata.]

It hath single circumfcribed leaves, like the ranunculus: the cup of the flower consists of five small leaves of the same colour with the flower.

GLOBE Thistle. n. f.

It hath the whole appearance of a thistle: the leaves are produced alternately: the flowers consist of one leaf, which is divided into five segments, and is hollow, and each single flower has a fealy cup: the flowers are collected into a spherical head, which has the common cup or covering.

GLOBOSE adj. [globosus, Latin.] Spherical; round.

Regions, to which

All thy dominion, Adam, is no more
Than what this garden is to all the earth,
And all the sea; in one entire globe
Stretch'd into longitude.

Milton.

Then form'd the moon

Globe, and ev'ry magnitude of stars.

Milton.

GLOBOSITY n. f. [globositas.] Sphericity; sphericity.

Why the same eclipse of the sun, which is seen to them that live more easterly, when the sun is elevated six degrees above the horizon, should be seen to them that live one degree more westerly, where the sun is but five degrees above the horizon, and so lower and lower proportionally, 'till at last it appear not at all: no account can be given, but the globosity of the earth.

Roy.

GLOBOUS adj. [globosus, Latin.] When the accent is intended to be on the last syllable, the word should be written globose, when on the first globous: I have transferred hither a passage of Adrian, in which this rule has been neglected.] Spherical; round.

Wide over all the plain, and wider far
Than all this globe; earth in plain outspread,
Such are the courts of God!

Milton.

The brazen instruments of death discharge
Horrible flames, and turbid streaming clouds;
Large globe's iron fly, of dreadful his,

Philips.

GLOBULAR adj. [globularis, Latin.] In form of a small sphere; round; spherical.

The figure of the atoms of all visible fluids seemeth to be globular, there being no other figure so well fitted to the making of fluidity.

Grew.

GLOBULARIA n. f. [Lat. globularia, Fr.] A flocculent flower, consisting of many flowers, which are divided into several segments, and have one lip.

Willd.

GLOBULE n. f. [Globule, Fr. globulus, Lat.] Such a small particle of matter as is of a globular or spherical figure, as the particles of the blood, which swim in a transparent serum, and are easily discovered by the microscope. These will attract one another when they come within a due distance, and unite like the spheres of quicksilver.

Quincy.

The hailstones have opaque globules of snow in their centre, to intercept the light with the halo.

Newton.

Blood consists of red globules, swimming in a thin liquor called serum: the red globules are elastic, and will break: the vessels which admit the smaller globules, cannot admit the greater without a discale.

Arbutnot.

GLOBULOUS adj. [globulosus, Latin.] In form of a small sphere; round.

The whiteness of such globulous particles proceeds from the air included in the froth.

Boyle.

TO GLOMERATE v. a. [glomerare, Latin.] To gather into a ball or sphere.

GLOMERATION n. f. [glomeratione, Latin.]

1. The act of forming into a ball or sphere.

2. A body formed into a ball.

The rainbow consisteth of a glomeration of small drops, which cannot possibly fall but from the air that is very low.

Bacon's Natural History.

GLOMEROUS adj. [glomerosus, Latin.] Gathered into a ball or sphere.

GLOOM n. f. [glomans, Saxon, twilight.]

1. Imperfect darkness; dimness; obscurity; defect of light.

Glowing embers through the room,

Teach light to counterfeit a gleam.

This is the fact,

Milton.

That we must change for heav'n? This mournful gloom,
For that celestial light?

Milton.

The still night, not now, as ere men fell,
Wholome and cool, and mild; but with black air
Accompany'd; with damps, and deadful gleam.

Milton.

Now wain in love, now with'ring in thy bloom,
Lost in a convent's solitary gleam.

Pope.

2. Cloudiness of aspect; heaviness of mind; fullness.

TO GLOOM v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To thine obscurely, as the twilight. This sense is not now in use.

His glistering armour made

A little glooming light much like a shade.

Spenser.

Scarcely had Phœbus in the glo'ming east

Yet harnessed his fiery footed team.

Spenser.

2. To be cloudy; to be dark.

3. To be melancholy; to be fullen.

GLOOMILY adv. [from gloom.]

Thomson.

The villain spider lives.

GLOOMINESS n. f. [from gloomy.]

1. Want of light; obscurity; imperfect light; dismalness.

2. Want of cheerfulness; cloudiness of look; heaviness of mind; melancholy.

Neglect spreads gloominess upon their humour, and makes them grow fullen and unconvertible.

Spenser.

The gloominess in which sometimes the minds of the best men are involved, very often stands in need of such little incitements to mirth and laughter as are apt to disperse melancholy.

Addison's Spectator.

GLOOMY adj. [from gloom.]

1. Obscure; imperfectly illuminated; almost dark; dismal for want of light.

These were from without

The growing mists, which Adam saw

Already in part, though hid in gloomish shade,

To frown abandon'd.

Milton.

Deep in a cavern dwells the drowsy god,

Whose gloomy mansion nor the ring sun,

Nor setting vults, nor the lightnoon.

Dryd.

The surface of the earth is clearer or gloomier, just as the sun is bright or more overcast.

Pope.

2. Dark of complexion.

That fair field

Of Fenna, where Proserpine gathering flowers,

Herself a fairer flower, by gloomy Dis

Was gather'd.

Milton.

3. Sullen; melancholy; cloudy of look; heavy of heart.

GLOOMED adj. [from gloom.] Illustrious; honourable; decorated with glory; dignified with honours.

Old respect,

As I suppose, toward your once glory'd friend,

My son now captive, hither hath importun'd

Your younger sect, while mine cast back with age

Came lagging after.

Milton.

GLOTTICATION n. f. [glottication, Fr. from glottis.] The act of giving glory.

At opening your eyes, enter upon the day with thanksgiving for the preservation of you the last night, with the glorification of God for the works of the creation.

Taylor.

TO GLORIFY v. a. [glorifier, French; glorifier, Latin.]

1. To procure honour or praise to one.

Two such silver currents, when they join,

Do glorify the banks that bound them in.

Shakspeare.

Justice is their virtue; that alone

Makes them sit sure, and glorify the throne.

Daniel.

2. To pay honour or praise in worship.

God is glorified when such his excellency, above all things, is with due admiration acknowledged.

Haller.

This term and manner of glorifying God was not at that time first begun; but received long before, and alleged at that time as an argument for the truth.

Haller.

Good fellow, tell us here the circumstance,

That we for thee may glorify the Lord.

Shakspeare.

All nations shall glorify thy name.

Psalms.

This is the perfection of every thing, to attain its true and proper end; and the end of all these gifts and endowments, which God hath given us, is to glorify the giver.

Taylor.

3. To praise; to honour; to extol.

Whomsoever they find to be most licentious of life, desperate in all parts of disobedience and rebellious disposition, him they set up and glorify.

Spenser.

No chymist yet the elixir got,

But glorify his pregnant pot,

It by the way to him betall

Some odorous thing, or medicinal.

Deane.

4. To exalt to glory or dignity.

If God be glorified in him, God shall also glorify him in himself, and shall straightway glorify him.

John.

Whom he justified, then he also glorified.

Rom.

The soul, being immortal, will, at some time or other, resume its body again in a glorified manner.

Augustine.

GLORIOUS adj. [gloriosus, Latin; glorieux, French.]

1. Bountiful; proud; haughty; ostentatious.

Glorious followers, who make themselves as trumpets of the commendation of those they follow, taint business for want of ferrety.

Johnson.

They that are glorious must needs be fallacious; for all bravery stands upon comparisons.

Bacon.

2. Noble; illustrious; excellent.

Johnson.

Let them know that thou art Lord, the only God, and glorious over the whole world. Daniel.

Impartial justice holds her equal scales,
'Till stronger virtue does the weight incline;
If over thee thy glory thou prevails,
He now defends the cause that once was thine. Prior.

Let us remember we are Cato's friends,
And act like men who claim that glorious title. Addison.
Glorious. v. adu. [from gloria.] Nobly; splendidly; il-lustriously. Dryden.

They inspire with those celestial flames, which shine so gloriously in their works. Dryden.

Great wits sometimes may gloriously offend,
And rise to faults true crickets dare not mend. Pope.

Glorious. n. f. [glorie, French; gloria, Latin.] Among the old poets it was used sometimes as one syllable, glorie.]

1. Praise; aid in adoration. Lucretius.
Glorious to God in the highest.

2. The felicity of heaven prepared for those that please God.
'Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterwards receive me to thy glory. Psalms.

'Then enter into glory, and resume
His seat at God's right hand, exalted high Above all names in heaven. Milton.

3. Honour; praise; fame; renown; celebrity.
I think it not a glory to be in vain. Sidney.
Glory is like a circle in the water,

Which never ceaseth to enlarge itself,
'Till by broad spreading it dispense to nought. Shakspeare.

And with that word, and warning seen was light,
Each soldier longing for near coming glory. Fairfax.

Can we imagine that either the ambition of princes, or interest, or gain in private persons, or curiosity and the desire of knowledge, or the play of discovery, could ever move them in the much time to try their fortunes upon the sea. Burnet.

4. Splendour; magnificence.
Edonion, in all his glory, was not arrayed like one of these. Matthew.

'Treated to ill, chas'd from thy throne,
Returning, you adorn the town;
And with a brae revenge do show
Their way went and came with you. Waller.

Aristotle says, that should a man under ground converse with works of art, and be afterwards brought up into the open day, and see the several series of the heaven and earth, he would pronounce them the works of God. Addison.

5. Laude; brightness.
Now sleeping flocks on their soft fleeces lie:
The moon, serene in glory, mounts the sky. Pope.

From opening skies may flaming glories shine,
And faints embrace thee with a love like mine. Pope.

6. A circle of rays which surrounds the heads of saints in picture.
It is not a converting but a crowning grace; such an one as irradiates, and puts a circle of glory about the head of him upon whom it descends. South.

A mule plays with a surprising ageableness in the eye, breaks out with the brightest distinction, and fits like a glory upon the countenance. Catlin.

7. Pride; haughtiness; arrogance.
By the vain glory of men they entered into the world, and therefore shall they come shortly to an end. Wisdom.

8. Generous pride.
The success of those wars was too notable to be unknown to your ears, to which all worthy fame hath glory to come unto. Sidney.

To GLORY. v. n. [glorior, Lat.] To boast in; to be proud of.
With like judgment glorying when he had happened to do a thing well, as when he had performed some notable mischief. Sidney.

They were wont, in the pride of their own proceedings, to glorise, that whereas Luther did but blow away the roof, and Zuinglius hate: but the walls of popish superstition, the last and hardest work of all remained, which was to raze up the very ground and foundation of popery. Hobbes.

Let them look they glory not in mischief,
Nor build their evils on the graves of great men;
For then thy guiltless blood must cry against them. Shakspeare.

Your glorying is not good. 1 Cor.
I thou shalt see mount Atlas,
While storms and tempests thunder on its brow,
And oceans break their billows at its feet,
It stands unmoved, and glories in its height. Addison.

This title is what I must glory in, and what most effectually calls to my mind the happiness of that government under which I live. Addison.

If others may glory in their birth, why may not we, whose parents were called by God to attend on him at his altar? At.
No one is out of the reach of misfortune; no one therefore should glory in his prosperity. Clarissa.

To GLOSS. v. a. To flatter; to colloquy. Hammer. See
To GLOZE.

GLOSS. n. f. [γλῶσσαι; glōss, French.]

1. A lection; a comment.

They never hear sentence, which mentioneth the word at scripture, but forthwith their gloss upon it are the next preached, the scripture explains, or delivered unto as in sermons. Har.

If then all souls, both good and bad, do teach,
With general voice, that souls can never die;
'Tis not man's flatter'ing gloss, but nature's speech,
Which, like God's oracles, can never lie. Daniel.

Some mutter at certain passages therein, by putting gloss upon the text, and taking with the left hand what I tell with the right. Har.

All this, without a gloss or comment,
He could unriddle in a moment.

In many places he has perverted my meaning by his gloss, and interpreted my words into blasphemy and injury, of which they were not guilty. Dryden.

They give the scandal, and the wise discern;
Their gloss teach an age too apt to learn.

Explaining the text in short glosses, as Accursius's method,
Enter's Reflexive in Law, &c.

In censure, cov'nants, articles they draw,
Large as the fields themselves, and larger far
'I than civil codes with all their glosses are. Pope.

2. An interpretation artfully specious; a specious representation.
Poor painters oft with filthy poets join,
To fill the world with strange but vain conceits;
One brings the stuff, the other stamps the coin,
Which breeds nought else but glosses of deceit. Sidney.

It is no part of my secret meaning to draw you hereby into hatred, or to let upon the face of this cause any false than the naked truth doth afford. Har.

He seems with forged quaint conceits
To let a gloss upon his bad intent. Sidney.

The common gloss
Of theologians. Har.

3. Superficial lustre.
His iron coat, all over grown with rust,
Was underneath enveloped with gold,
Whole glittering glosses dark'ned with filthy dust. Spenser.

You are a sectary,
That's the plain truth: your painted gloss discovers,
To men that understand you, words and weakness. Shakspeare.

Golden opinions from all sorts of people,
Which would be worn now in their new glosses,
The doubt will be whether it will polish so well; for bad glosses are more rependable than the lace plates of bad, and so is the glittering of a blade. Har.

Weeds that the wind did toss
The virgins wore: the youths, woven coats, the old faint dim glosses. Shakspeare.

Like that of oil
It was the colour of devotion, giving a lustre to reason, and a gloss to humility. South.

Groves, fields, and meadows, are at any season pleasant to look upon; but never so much as in the opening of the spring, when they are all new and fresh, with their fresh gloss upon them. Addison's Spectator.

To GLOSS. v. n. [glosser, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To comment.
Thou detain'st Briseis in thy bands,
By priestly glossing on the gods commands. Dryden.

2. To make fly remarks.
Her equals first observ'd her growing zeal,
And laughing gloss'd, that Abra serv'd so well. Pope.

To GLOSS. v. a.
1. To explain by comment.

No woman shall succeed in Salique land;
Which Salique land the French unjustly gloss
To be the realm of France.

In parchment then, large as the fields, he draws Assurances, big as gossamer civil laws.

2. To palliate by specious exposition or representation.
Is this the paradise, in description whereto I must fly,
and deceiving eloquence hath been spent?

Do I not reason wholly on your conduct?
You have the art to gloss the foulest cause. Shakspeare.

3. To embellish with superficial lustre.
But thou, who lately of the common strain
Wert one of us, if still thou do'st retain
The same ill habits, the same follies thou,
Gloss'd over only with a faint-like show,
I then I resume the freedom which I gave,
Still thou art bound to vice, and still a slave. Dryden.

GLOSSARY. n. f. [glossarium, Latin; glossaire, French.] A dictionary of obscure or antiquated words.

According to Varro, the most learned of the Romans, when dedicrum was applied to a place, it signified such sort in quo Dei sacrificium dedicatum est; and also in the old faries. Shakspeare.

I could add another word to the glossary. Baker.
GLOSSATOR. n. f. [glossator, French, from gloss.] A writer of glosses; a commentator.

The reason why the allection of a single judge does not prove the existence of judicial acts, is because his office is to pronounce judgment; and not to become an evidence: but why may not the same be said of two judges? Therefore, in this respect, the glossator's opinion must be false. Ayliffe.

GLOSSER. n. f. [glossator, Latin.]
 1. A scholiast; a commentator.
 2. A polisher.

GLOSSINESS. n. f. [from gloss.] Smooth polish; superficial lustre.

Those grains were as like little cubes as if they had been made by a skilful jeweller, and their surfaces had a smoothness and glossiness much surpassing whatever I had observed in marine or common salt. Boyle.

GLOSSOGRAPHER. n. f. [γλωσσεα and γραφω.] A scholiast;
 a commentator.

GLOSSOGRAPHY. n. f. [γλωσσεα and γραφω.] The writing of commentaries.

GLOSSY. adj. [from gloss.] Shining; smoothly polished.

There came towards us a peison of place; he had on him a gown with wide sleeves, of a kind of water-comblet, of an excellent azure colour, far more glossy than ours. Bacon.

The rest entire

Shone with a glossy scarf. Milton.

His furcoat was a breakin on his back;

His hair hung long behind, and glossy raven black. Dryden.

Myself will search our planted grounds at home,

For downy peaches and the glossy plum. Dryden.

GLOVE. n. f. [χλοε, Saxon, from klafva, Danish, to divide.]
 Cover of the hands.

Like an uprear in a town,

Before them every thing went down;

They flew about like chaff i' th' wind;

For haste some left their masks behind;

Some could not stay their gloves to find. Dryden.

White gloves were on his hands, and on his head

A wreath of laurel. Dryden.

GLOVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover as with a glove.

My limbs,

Weaken'd with grief, being now enrag'd with grief,

Are thrice themselves: hence therefore, thou nice crutch;

A scaly gauntlet now, with joints of steel,

Must glove this hand. Shakespeare.

The next he preys on is her palm,

That alm'n'er of transpiring balm;

So soft, 'tis air but once remov'd;

Tender as 'twere a jelly glov'd. Cleaveland.

GLOVER. n. f. [from glove.] One whose trade is to make or sell gloves.

Does he not wear a great round beard like a glover's paring knife? Shakespeare.

TO GLOUT. v. n. [A low word of which I find no etymology.]
 To pour; to look fullen. It is still used in Scotland.

She lurks in midst of all her den, and streaks

From out a ghastly whirlpool all her necks,

Where, glouting round her rock, to fish she falls. Chapman.

Glouting with sullen spite, the fury shook

Her elotod locks, and blasted with each look. Garib.

TO GLOW. v. n. [glofan, Saxon; gloeyen, Dutch.]

1. To be heated so as to shine without flame.

But fithence silence lessenth not my fire,

But told it flames, and hidden it does glow,

I will reveal what ye so much desire. Spenser.

His goolly eyes,

That o'er the files and musters of the war

Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bend, now turn

Their office upon a tawny front. Shakespeare.

Kunigund, wife to the emperor Henry II. to show her innocency, did take seven glowing irons, one after another, in her bare hands, and had thereby no harm. Hakewill.

Not all parts like, but all alike inform'd

With radiant light, as glowing iron with fire. Milton.

2. To burn with vehement heat.

Nor would you find it easy to compose

The metted floods, when to their nostrils flows

The scorching fire that in their entrails glows. Addison.

How op'ning heav'n his happy regions show,

And yawning gulphs with flaming vengeance glow. Smith.

Fires that glow,

Shrieks of woe. Pope.

3. To feel heat of body.

Did not his temples glow

In the same sultry winds and scorching heats? Addison.

The cord slides swiftly through his glowing hands. Gay.

4. To exhibit a strong bright colour.

With smile that glow'd

Celestial rosy red, love's proper hue. Milton.

Nº LXIII.

Clad in a gown that glows with Tyrian rays. Dryden.

A malicious joy,

Whose red and fiery beams cast through your visage

A glowing pleasure. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.

From the mingled strength of shade and light,

A new creation rises to my sight;

Such heav'nly figures from his pencil flow,

So warm with life his blended colours glow,

Amidst the soft variety I'm lost. Addison.

Like th' ethereal glow'd the green expanse. Savage.

Fair ideas flow,

Strike in the sketch, or in the picture glow. Pope.

Not the fair fruit that on yon branches glows,

With that ripe red th' autumnal fun bestows,

Can move the god. Pope.

Each pleasing Glow shall endless smiles bestow,

And fair Delinda's blush for ever glow. Pope.

Here chamber flares glow round the frozen pole. Pope.

From her naked limbs of glowing white,

In folds to see bowings, 'till the fainter lawn. Thomson.

5. To feel passion of mind, or alluvy of fancy.

You strive in vain

To hide your thoughts from him, who knew too well

The inward glowings of a heart in love. Addison.

For'd compliments and formal bows

Will show their just above n' glee;

This vice with which thy lover glows,

Will settle into cold respect. Prior.

Did Shadrach's zeal my glowing breast inspire

To weary tortures, and rejoice in fire. Prior.

Let the gay conscience of a life well spent

Calm ev'ry thought, inspire ev'ry grace,

Glow in thy heart, and smile upon thy face. Pope.

With furies furrow'd,

Despairing confounded,

He trembles, he glows,

Amidst Rhodope's snows. Pope.

So perish all, whose breasts ne'er learn'd to glow.

For others good, or melt at others woe. Pope.

To praise is always hard,

When real virtue fires the glowing bard. Lewis.

6. To rage or burn as a passion.

A fire which every windy passion blows;

With pride it mounts, and with revenge it glows. Dryden.

When crept into aged veins,

Love slowly burns, and long remains;

It glows, and with a fullen heat,

Like fire in logs, it warms us long. Shadwell.

TO GLOW. v. a. To make hot so as to shine. Not in use.

On each side her

Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids,

With divers colour'd fans, whose wind did seem,

To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool. Shak.

GLOW. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Shining heat.

2. Vehemence of passion.

3. Brightness or vividness of colour.

The pale complexion of true love,

And the red glow of scorn and proud disdain. Shakespeare.

A waving glow his bloomy beds display,

Blushing in bright diversities of day. Pope.

GLOWWORM. n. f. [glow and worm.] A small creeping insect with a luminous tail.

The honey bags steal from the humble bees,

And for night-tapers crop their waxen thighs,

And light them at the fiery glowworm's eyes. Shakespeare.

The glowworm shews the matron to be near,

And 'gins to pale his uneffectual fire. Shakespeare.

A great light drowneth a smaller that it cannot be seen;

as the sun that of a glowworm. Bacon.

The man, who first upon the ground

A glowworm spy'd, supposing he had found

A moving diamond, a breathing stone;

For life it had, and like those jewels thence:

He held it dear, 'till by the springing day

Inform'd, he threw the worthless worm away. Waller.

TO GLOZE. v. n. [glozan, Saxon.]

1. To flatter; to wheedle; to insinuate; to fawn.

Man will hearken to his glazing lies,

And easily transgress. Milton.

So glaz'd the tempter, and his poem tun'd:

Into the heart of Eve his words made way. Milton.

A false glazing parasite would call his foolhardiness valour, and then he may go on boldly, because blindly, and by mistaking himself for a lion, come to perish like an ass. South.

Now for a glazing speech,

Fair protestations, specious marks of friendship. Philips.

2. To comment. I his should be glifs.

Which Salique land the French unjustly glaze

To be the realm of France. Shakespeare.

GLAZE, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Flattery; insinuation.

Now to plain dealing; lay these glazes by. Shakspeare.

2. Specious show; gloss.

Precious couches full oft are shaked with a fever;
If then a bodily evil in a bodily glaze be not hidden,
Shall such morning dew be at ease to the heat of a love's fire? Sidney.

GLUE, n. f. [glu, Fr. gluten, Lat. glut, Welsh] A viscous body commonly made by boiling the skins of animals to a gelly; any viscous or tenacious matter by which bodies are held one to another; a cement.

Water, and all liquors, do hastily receive dry and more terrestrial bodies proportionable; and dry bodies, on the other side, drink in waters and liquors: so that, as it was well said by one of the ancients of earthly and watery substances, one is a glue to another. Bacon.

To build the earth did chance materials chuse,
And through the parts cementing glue diffuse. Blackmore.
The clearest, driest, and most transparent glue is the best. Milton.

The flowers of grains, mixed with water, will make a sort of glue. Arbutnot.

GLUE, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To join with a viscous cement.

I fear thy overthrow

More than my body's parting with my soul:
My love and fear glue'd many friends to thee. Shakspeare.
Who teacheth a fool is as one that glue'd a potsherd together. Ecclesiast. xxii. 7.

The custom of crowning the Holy Virgin is so much in vogue among the Italians, that one often sees in their churches a little tinzel crown, or a circle of stars, glue'd to the canvas over the head of the figure. Addison.

Most wounds, if kept clean, and from the air, the flesh will glue together with its own native balm. Derham.

2. To hold together.

The parts of all homogeneous hard bodies, which fully touch one another, stick together very strongly; and for explaining how this may be, some have invented hooked atoms, which is begging the question; and others tell us their bodies are glue'd together by rest, that is, by an occult quality, or rather by nothing. Newton.

3. To join; to unite; to inviscate.

Those walsps in a honeycomb are so many sensual men, that are plunged in their lusts and pleasures, and when they are once glue'd to them, 'tis a very hard matter to work themselves out. L'Estrange.

Intemperance, sensuality, and fleshly lusts, do debase mens minds and clog their spirits; sink us down into sense, and glue us to those low and inferior things. Tillotson.

She curb'd a groan, that else had come;

And pausing, view'd the present in the tomb;
'Then to the heart ador'd devoutly glue'd
Her lips, and, raising it, her speech renew'd. Dryden.

I hear thee, view thee, gaze o'er all thy charms,
And round thy phantom gine my clasping arms. Pope.

GLUEBOILER, n. f. [glue and boil.] One whose trade is to make glue.

GLUER, n. f. [from glue.] One who cements with glue.

GLUM, adj. [A low cant word formed by corrupting glum.] Sullen; sulkily grave.

Some, when they hear a story, look glum, and cry, Well, what then? Guardian.

TO GLUT, v. a. [englutir, French; glutit, Lat. to swallow; γλυττω.]

1. To swallow; to devour.

'Till cram'd and gorg'd, nigh burst

With suck'd and glutted offal. Milton.

2. To cloy; to fill beyond sufficiency; to sate; to disgust.

The ambassador, making his oration, did so magnify the king and queen, as was enough to glut the hearers. Bacon.
Love breaks friendship, whose delights
Feed, but not glut our appetites. Denham.

What way remove

His settled hate, and reconcile his love,
That he may look propitious on our toils,
And hungry graves no more be glutted with our spoils. Dryden.

No more, my friend;

Here let our glutted execution end. Dryden.

I found

The fickle ear soon glutted with the sound,
Condemn'd eternal changes to pursue,
Tir'd with the lass, and eager of the new. Prior.

3. To feast or delight even to satiety.

With death's carcass glut the grave,
His faithful heart, a bloody sacrifice,
Torn from his breast, to glut the tyrant's eyes. Dryden.

A sylvan scene, which, rising by degrees,
Leads up the eye before, nor gluts the sight
With one full prospect; but invites by many,
To view at last the whole. Dryden.

4. To overfill; to load.

He attributes the ill success of either party to the pressure the market, and retailing too much of a bad commodity at once.

5. To saturate.

The menstrum, being already glutted, could not absorb fully enough to dissolve it.

GLUT, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. That which is gorged or swallowed.

Disgorging food

Their devilish glut, chain'd thunderbolts, and hail
Of iron globes. Milton.

2. Plenty even to loathing and satiety.

So death

Shall be deceiv'd his glut; and with us two
Be forc'd to satisfy his ravenous maw. Milton.
Let him but let the one in balance against the other, and he shall find himself miserable, even in the very glut of his delights. L'Estrange.

A glut of study and retirement in the first part of my life, call me into this; and this will throw me again into study and retirement. Pope's Epistle.

3. More than enough; overmuch.

If you pour a glut of water upon a bottle, it receives less of it. Ben. Jonson.

4. Any thing that fills up a passage.

The water some suppose to pass continually from the bottom of the sea to the heads of springs and rivers, through certain subterranean conduits or channels, and they were by some glut, stop, or other means, arrested in their passage. Barrow.

GLUTINOUS, adj. [glutinosus, French; from glut, Latin.] Gluey; viscous; tenacious.

The cause of all vivification is a gentle and imperceptible heat, working upon a glutinous and yielding substance; for the heat doth bring forth spirit in that substance, and the substance being glutinous, produceth two effects: the one, that the spirit is detained, and cannot break forth; the other, that the matter, being gentle and yielding, is driven forward by the motion of the spirits, after some swelling, into large and members. Bacon.

Next this marble venom'd seat,

Smear'd with gums of glutinous heat. Milton.
Nourishment too viscous and glutinous to be fed by the vital force. Arbutnot.

GLUTINOUSNESS, n. f. [from glutinosus.] Viscosity; tenacity. There is a reticence in fluids, which may arise from their elasticity, glutinosity, and the friction of their parts. Coyne.

GLUTTON, n. f. [glutton, French; from glut, Latin, to swallow.]

1. One who indulges himself too much in eating.

The Chinese eat horseradish at this day, and some think have used to have catsfish baked. Isaac.

Through Macer's gullet she runs down,
When the vile glutten dines alone;
And, void of modesty and thought,
She follows Bibbo's endless draught. Pope.

2. One eager of any thing to excess.

The rest bring home in state the happy pair
To that last scene of bliss, and leave them there;
All those free joys insatiably to prove,
With which rich beauty feeds the gamster love. Cowper.
Gluttons in murder, wanton to destroy,
Their fatal arts so surpiciously employ. Gravelle.

TO GLUTTONISE, v. n. [from glutton.] To play the glutton; to be luxurious.

GLUTTONOUS, adj. [from glutton.] Given to excessive feeding; delighted overmuch with food.

When they would smile and fawn upon his deities,
And take down th' interest in their glutinous jaws. Steele.
The exceeding luxuriousness of this glutinous age, when we press nature with overweighty burdens, and bring her strength defective, we take the work out of her hands, and commit it to the artificial help of foreign waters. Ray's.

Thou well observe

The rule of not too much, by temperance taught
In what thou eat'st and drink'st; seeking from excess
Due nourishment, not gluttenous delight. Milton.

GLUTTONOUSLY, adv. [from gluttonous.] With the excess of a glutton.

GLUTTONY, n. f. [gluttonia, Fr. from glutire.] Excessive eating; luxury of the table.

Their sumptuous gluttonies and gorgeous feasts,
On citron tables or Atlantick stone. Milton.

Well may they feast from more miserable end,
Whom gluttony and want at once attend. Pope.

The inhabitants of cold moist countries are generally more fat than those of warm and dry; but the most common cause is too great a quantity of food, and too small a quantity of motion; in plain English, gluttony and laziness. Arbutnot.

GLUTY, adj. [from glut.]

2. Viscous; tenacious; glutinous.

It is called balfamick mixture, because it is a glay spumous matter. Harv.
 With glay was some new foundations lay Dryden
 Of virgin combs.
 Whatever is the composition of the vapour, let it have but one quality of being very glay or viscous, and it will mechanically solve all the phenomena of the grotto. Addison
GLYN. n. f. [Irish; glann, glyn, plur. Erfc; glenn, Scottish.] A hollow between two mountains.
 Though he could not beat out the Irish, yet he did shut them up within those narrow corners and glyn under the mountain's foot. Spenser
To GNAR. } v. n. [gnýppan, Saxon; anzeren, Dutch.] To growl; to growl; to murmur; to snarl.
 When he 'gan to rear his bristles strong,
 And felly gnar, until day's enemy
 Did him appeale. Spenser
 Thus is the shepherd beaten from thy side,
 And wolves are *gnar*ing who still gnaw thee swift. Shakspeare
*Gnar*ing sorrow hath less power to snarl.
 The man that mocks at it, and sets it light. Shakspeare
 The *gnar*ing porter durst not wane for doubt;
 Still were the furies while their sovereign spoke. Farisfar
GNARLED. adj. [gnar, nar, or nurr, is in Staffordshire a hard knot of wood which boys drive with sticks.] Knotty.
 Merciful heav'n!
 Thou rather with thy sharp and sulph'rous bolt
 Split't'st the unweepleable and gnarled oak,
 Than the soft myrtle. Shakspeare
To GNASH. v. a. [knashen, Dutch.] To strike together; to clash.
 The deer, who could not yet his wrath assuage,
 Rowl'd his green eyes, that spark'd with his rage,
 And gnash'd his teeth. Dryden
To GNASH. v. n.
 1. To grind or collide the teeth.
 He shall gnash with his teeth, and melt away. Psalms
 There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. Matthew
 2. To rage even to collision of the teeth; to fume; to growl.
 His great iron teeth he still did grind,
 And grimly gnash'd, threatening revenge in vain. Spenser
 They gnashed upon me with their teeth. Psalms
 They him laid
Gnashing for anguish, and despite and shame,
 To find himself not matchless. Milton
 With boiling rage Atreides burn'd,
 And foam betwix his gnashing grinders churn'd. Dryden
GNAT. n. f. [gnat, Saxon.]
 1. A small winged stinging insect.
 Her whip of cricket's bone, the lash of film;
 Her waggoner, a small grey-coated gnat. Shakspeare
 2. Any thing proverbially small.
 Ye blind guides, which strain at a gnat, and swallow a camel. Matthew GNATFLOWER. n. f. [gnat and flower.] A flower otherwise called the bee-flower.
GNATSNAPPER. n. f. [gnat and snapper.] A bird so called, because he lives by catching gnats.
 They deny that any bird is to be eaten whole, but only the gnat-snapper. Hakewill
To GNAW. v. a. [gnagan, Saxon; knagen, Dutch.]
 1. To eat by degrees; to devour by slow corrosion.
 To you such knab'd harsh fruit is giv'n, as raw Young soldiers at their exercisings gnaw. Dryden
 2. To bite in agony or rage.
 Alas, why gnaw you to your nether lip?
 Some bloody passion shakes your very frame. Shakspeare
 They gnawed their tongues for pain. Revelations
 He comely fell, and dying gnaw'd the ground. Dryden
 3. To wear away by biting.
Gnawing with my teeth my bonds asunder,
 I gain'd my freedom. Shakspeare
 Like rotten fruit I fall, worn like a cloth
Gnawed into rags by the devouring moth. Sandys
 A lion, hampered in a net, called to a mouse to help him out of the snare: the mouse gnawed the threads to pieces, and set the lion at liberty. L'Estrange
 4. To fret; to waste; to corrode.
 5. To pick with the teeth.
 His bones clean pick'd; his very bones they gnaw. Dryden
To GNAW. v. n. To excruciate the teeth.
 I might well, like the spaniel, gnaw upon the chain that ties him; but I should sooner mar my teeth than procure liberty. Sidney
 See the hell of having a false woman: my bed shall be abused, my coverts ransacked, my reputation gnawed at. Shakspeare
 I thought I saw a thousand fearful wrecks,
 A thousand men that fishes gnaw'd upon. Shakspeare
GNAWER. n. f. [iron, gnaw.] One that gnaws.
GNOMON. n. f. [gnomon.] The hand or pin of a dial.
 The gnomon of every dial is supposed to represent the axis of the world, and therefore the two ends or extremities thereof must directly answer to the North and South pole. Harv.

 There were from great antiquity sun-dials, by the shadow of a style or gnomon, denoting the hours of the day. Brown GNOMONICKS. n. f. [γνωμονική.] A science which makes a part of the mathematics: it teaches to find the just proportion of shadows for the construction of all kinds of sun and moon dials, and for knowing what o'clock it is by means thereof; as also of a gnomon or stile, that throws off the shadow for this purpose. Trevoux
To GO. v. n. pret. I went; I have gone. [gan, Saxon. This was probably changed to gone, or gang, then contracted to go.]
 1. To walk; to move step by step.
 You know that love
 Will creep in service where it cannot go. Shakspeare
 After some months those muscles become callous; and,

 I has others we with defamation wound,
 While they stab us; and the go jest round. Dryden
 7. To remove from place to place.
 I am in blood
 Stept in so far, that, should I wade no more,
 Returning were as tedious as go o'er. Shakspeare
 8. To depart from a place; to move from a place; the opposite of to come.
 I hope it be not gone, to tell my lord
 That I kiss aught but him. Shakspeare
 At once, good-night:
 Stand not upon the order of your going,
 But go at once. Shakspeare
 Ye shall not go forth hence.
 And when he had so said she went her way.
 I will let you go, that ye may sacrifice; only you shall not go very far away. Exodus
 Colchester oysters are put into pits, where the sea goeth and cometh. Bacon
 A young tall squire
 Did from the camp at first before him go. Cowley
 Then I concur to let him go for Greece,
 And with our Egypt fairly rid of him.
 Go first the matter of thy herds to find,
 True to his charge, a loyal swain and kind. Dryden
 9. To move or pass in any manner, or to any end.
 Though the vicar be bad, or the parson be evil,
 Go not for thy thything thyself to the devil. Tusser
 She may go to bed when she list; all is as the will. Shak.
 You did with that I would make her turn;
 Sir, she can turn and turn, and yet go on. Shakspeare
 I am glad to see your lordship abroad; I heard say your lordship was sick: I hope your lordship goes abroad by advice. Shakspeare
 Go to, let us go down, and there confound their language. Gnisi
 Let my Lord go amongst us. Exodus
 The mourners go about the fleets. Ecclesiasticus

 be dark over them. Macabees
 Put every man his sword by his side, and go in and out from gate to gate throughout the camp. Exodus
 The sun, which once did shine alone,
 Hung done his head, and with'd for night,
 When he beheld twelve furs for one Going about the world, and giving light. Herbert
 This seen, the rest at awful distance flood,
 As if they had been there as servants fed,
 'To flay, or to go on, as he thought good,
 And not pursue, but wait on his retreat. Dryden
 Not turning them going, 'till you have given them all the satisfaction they are capable of, and so leading them by your answers into further questions. Locke History only acquaints us that his fleet went up the Elbe, he having carried his arms as far as the banks of that river. Arluinsten on Cairns
 The last advice I give you relates to your behaviour when you

you are going to be hanged, which, either for robbing your master, for housebreaking, or going upon the highway, may very probably be your lot.

Those who come for gold will go off with pewter and brass, rather than return empty.

10. To pass in company with others.

Thou shalt again be adorned with thy tabrets, and shalt go forth in the dances of them that make merry.

Whatever remains in story of Atlas, or his kingdom of old, is so obscured with age or fables, that it may go along with those of the Atlantick islands.

11. To proceed in any course of life good or bad.

He goeth in company with the workers of iniquity, and walketh with wicked men.

And the Levites that are gone away far from me, when Israel went astray, which went astray away from me after their idols, they shall even bear their iniquity.

12. To proceed in mental operations.

If I had unwarily too far engaged myself for the present publishing it, truly I should have kept it by me 'till I had once again gone over it.

Thus I have gone through the speculative consideration of the Divine Providence.

I hope, by going over all these particulars, you may receive some tolerable satisfaction about this great subject.

If we go over the laws of Christianity, we shall find that, excepting a very few particulars, they enjoin the very same things, only they have made our duty more clear and certain.

In their primary qualities we can go but a very little way.

I go over some parts of this argument again, and enlarge a little more upon them.

They are not able all their life-time to reckon, or regularly go over any moderate series of numbers.

13. To take any road.

I will go along by the highway; I will neither turn to the right hand, nor to the left.

Who shall bemoan thee? Or who shall go aside to ask how thou dost?

His horses go about

Almost a mile.

I have endeavoured to escape into the safe and freedom of a private scene, where a man may go his own way and his own pace.

14. To march in a hostile or warlike manner.

You were advis'd his flith was capable Of wounds and fears, and that his forward spirit Would lift where most trade of danger rang'd;

Yet did you say go forth.

We be not able to go up against the people; for they are stronger than we.

Let us go down after the Philistines by night, and spoil them until the morning light.

Thou art able to go against this Philistine to fight with him.

The remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles as a lion among the beasts of the forest; who, if he go through, both treadeth down and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver.

15. To change state or opinion for better or worse.

We will not hearken to the king's words to go from our religion.

The regard of the publick state, in so great a danger, made all those goodly things, which went so to wreck, to be lightly accounted of, in comparison of their lives and liberty.

They become secretly discontent, and look upon men and matters with an evil eye; and are best pleased when things go backward, which is the worst property of a servant of a prince or state.

All goes to ruin, they themselves contrive To rob the honey, and subvert the hive.

Landed men, as well as others, by their providence and good husbandry, accommodating their expenses to their income, keep themselves from going backwards in the world.

All goes to ruin, they themselves contrive

To rob the honey, and subvert the hive.

Landed men, as well as others, by their providence and good husbandry, accommodating their expenses to their income, keep themselves from going backwards in the world.

They kill us for their sport. Shaksf.

Strong god of arms, whose iron sceptre foways
The freezing North, and hyperborean seas,
And Scythian colds, and I haxia's winter coals,
We stand thy liege, and thou art honour'd most. Dryd.

3. Any person or thing desired or too much honoured.
Whole end is destruction, whole god is their belly. Phil.

I am not a co,
Nor a musician as I seem to be;
But one that seems to live in this disguise,
For such a one as leaves a gentleman,
And makes a god of such a cullion. Shaksf.

GO'D. v. a. [from the noun.] To deify; to exalt to divine honours.

This last old man,
Lov'd me above the measure of a father;
Nay, godd me, indeed. Shaksf.

GO'DCHLD. n. f. [god and child.] A term of spiritual relation; one for whom one became sponsor at baptism, and promised to be educated as a Christian.

GO'DDAUGHTER. n. f. [god and daughter.] A girl for whom one became sponsor in baptism. A term of spiritual relation.

GODDESS. n. f. [from god.] A female divinity Hear, nature, hear; dear goddess, hear a father! Shak.

A woman I forswore; but I will prove,
Thou being a goddess, I forswore not thee:
My vow was earthly, thou a heavenly love. Shaksf.

I long have waited in the temple nigh,
Built to the gracious goddess Clemency;
But rev'rence thou the power. Dryden.

From his seat the goddess born arose,
And thus undaunted spoke. Dryden.

When the daughter of Jupiter presented herself among a crowd of goddesses, she was distinguished by her graceful stature and superior beauty. Addisn.

Modestly with-held the goddess's train. Pope.

GO'DDESS-LIKE. adj. [goddess and like.] Resembling a goddess.

Then female voices from the shore I heard;
A maid amidst them goddess-like appear'd. Pete.

GO'DFATHER. n. f. [god and father.] The sponsor at the font

He had a son by her, and the king did him the honour to stand godfather to his child.

Confirmation, a profitable usage of the church, transcribed from the apostles, confists in the child's undertaking in his own name the baptismal vow; and, that he may more solemnly enter this obligation, bringing some godfather with him, not now, as in baptism, as his procurator. Hammond.

GO'DHEAD. n. f. [from god]

1. Godship; deity; divinity; divine nature.
Be content;
Your low laid son our godhead will uplift. Shaksf.

At the holy mount
Of heav'n's high feated top, th' imperial throne
Of godhead, fix'd for ever firm and sure,
The filial power arriv'd. Milton.

So may thy godhead be confess'd,
So the returning year be blest. Prer.

2. A deity in person; a god or goddess.
Were your godheads to borrow of men, men would forsake the gods. Shakspeare.

Adoring first the genius of the place,
The nymph and native godhead, yet unknown. Dryd.

GO'DLESS. a. j. [from god.] Without sense of duty to God; atheistical; wicked; irreligious; impious.

Of these two sorts of men, both godless, the one has utterly no knowledge of God, and the other studies how to persuade themselves that there is no such thing to be known. Hobbes.

That godless crew Rebellious. Milton.

For faults not his, for guilt and crimes
Of godless men, and of rebellious times,
Him his ungrateful country sent,
Their best Camillus, into banishment. Dryden.
Go'DLIKE, adj. [god and like.] Divine; resembling a divinity, supremely excellent.
Thus Adam his illustrious guest besought,
And thus the godlike angel answer'd mild.
Musing and much revolving in his breast,
How best the mighty work he might begin
Of Saviour to mankind, and what way first Publish his godlike office now mature. Milton.
That prince shall be to wife and godlike, as, by established Laws of liberty, to secure protection and encouragement to the honest industry of mankind. Lectr.
Go'DLING, n. f. [from god.] A little divinity; a diminutive god.

Thy puny godlings of inferior race,
Whose humble statues are content with brass. Dryd.
Go'DLINESS, n. f. [from godly.]

1. Piety to God.
2. General observation of all the duties prescribed by religion.
Virtue and godliness of life are required at the hands of the minister of God. Hosier.

Go'DLY, adj. [from god.]

1. Pious towards God.
Grant that we may hereafter live a godly, righteous, and sober life. Common Prayer.
2. Good; righteous; religious.

Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth, for the faithful fail among the children of men. Psalms.

The apostle St. Paul teacheth, that every one which will live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer persecution. Hosier.

Go'DLYHEAD, n. f. [from godly.] Goodness; righteousness.
An old word.

For this, and many more such outrages,
I crave your godly lead to slavery.
The rancorous rigour of his might. Spenser.

Go'DMOTHER, n. f. [god and mother.] A woman who has become sponsor in baptism. A term of spiritual relation.

Go'DSHIP, n. f. [from god.] The rank or character of a god;
deity; divinity.

Discouraging largely on this theme,
O'er hills and dales their godships came. Prior.

Go'DSON, n. f. [god and son.] One for whom one has been sponsor at the font.

What, did my father's godson seek your life?
He whom my father named? your Edgar? Shakspeare.

Go'DWARD, adj. To godward is toward God. So we read,
Hic Arabus tenuis, for beatissimus Arabus.
And such trust have we through Christ to godward. 2 Cer.

Go'DWIT, n. f. [god, good, and wit, an animal.] A bird of particular delicacy.

Nor ortels nor godwits crown his board. Cowley.
Go'DYIELD, adv. [corrupted from God shield or protect.] A term of thanks. Now not used.

Herein I teach you,
How you should bid godwits for your pains,
And thank us for your trouble. Shakspeare.

Go'EL, adj. [gole, Saxon.] Yellow. An old word.
In March at the furthest, dry season or wet,
Hop-roots so well chosen let skilful go for;
The goaler and younger, the better I love;
Well gutted and pared, the better they prove. Tupper.

Go'ER, n. f. [from go.]

1. One that goes; a runner.
I would they were in Africa both together,
Myself by with a needle, that I might prick
The goer back. Shakspeare.

Such a man
Might be a copy to these younger times;
Which, follow'd well, would now demonstrate them
But goers backward. Shakspeare.

Nothing could hurt either of us so much as the intervening officious impertinence of those goers between us, who in England pretend to intimacies with you, and in Ireland to intimacies with me. Pope.

2. A walker; one that has a gait or manner of walking good or bad.

The earl was so far from being a good dancer, that he was no graceful goer. Wotton.
To GOOGLE, v. n. To look afaint.

Inflam'd all over with disgrace,
To be seen by her in such a place,
Which made him hang his head, and scowl,
And wink and goggle like an owl. Hudibras.

Nor sighs, nor groans, nor goggling eyes did want. Dryden.
Go'CCLE-EYED, adj. [recl egen, Saxon.] Squint-eyed; not looking straight.

They are deformed, unnatural, or lame; and very unseemly to look upon, except to men that be goggle-eyed themselves. Arabian's Schoolmaster.

Go'ING, n. f. [from go.]

1. The act of walking.
When nobles are their taylor tutors,
No heretics burnt, but wenchers tutors,
Then comes the time, who lives to see,
That going shall be us'd with feet. Shakspeare.

2. Pregnancy.

The time of death has a far greater latitude than that of our birth; most women coming, according to their reckoning, within the compass of a fortnight; that is, the twentieth part of their going. Grav's capital.

3. Departure.
Thy going is not lonely; with thee goes
Thy husband; him to follow thou art bound. Milton.

GOLA, n. f. The fame with CYNATHUM, which see.

In a cornice the gola, or cymation of the cornice, the crying,
the molitions or dentelli, make a noble flow. Shakspeare.

GOLD, n. f. [golo, Saxon; guld, Frisian, which is called gold in our English tongue either of gelo, as Waller gelo says, which is in Dutch to shine, or of Waller Dutch word, which is golen, and signifies in Latin color, in English to be of price or value: hence cometh their ordinary name for money. Pecham on Draining.

1. Gold is the heaviest, the most dense, the most elastic, the most ductile, and most fixed of all bodies; not to be melted either by air or fire, and seeming incorruptible. It is scarce by means of sea-salt; but is injured by no other salt, and is most easily of all metals amalgamated with silver. Gold is frequently found native, and very rarely in a state of ore. It never constitutes a peculiar ore, but is found most frequently among ore of silver. Native gold is found most frequently among the sand of rivers in many parts of the world. It is found, in the greatest abundance, bedded in masses of hard stone, often at the depth of a hundred and fifty fathoms in the mines of Peru. Pure gold is so fixed, that Booth has used of an ounce of it fit in the eye of a glass lens for two months, without losing a single grain. Hill.

Gold hath these natures: greatness of weight, cleanness of parts, fixation, pliancy or softness, immutability true red, and the colour or tincture of yellow. Booth.

Ah! Buckingham, now do I play the touch,
To try if thou be current gold indeed. Shakspeare.

We commonly take shape and colour for the primary ideas of several species, that, in a good picture, we usually say this is gold, and that a silver goblet, only by the distinct figures and colours represented to the eye by the pencil. Lake.

The gold fraught vessels, which mad temperance
He fees now vainly make to his retreat. Dryden.

2. Money.
For me, the gold of France did not seduce,
Although I did admit it as a motive
The fount to effect what I intended. Shakspeare.

Thou, that so stoutly hadst resisted me,
Give me thy gold, if thou hast any gold;
For I have bought it with an hundred blows. Shakspeare.

If I want gold, I'll beat a beggar's dog,
And give it I'mon, why, the dog coins gold. Shakspeare.

3. It is used for any thing pleasing or valuable. So among the ancients χρυσον αἰσθητή; and αἰσθητή; merces aurea said in apla. Horace.

The king's a bawcock, and a heart of gold,
A lad of life, an imp of fame. Shakspeare.

GOLD of Pleasure, n. f. [myogram.]

It hath a flower of four leaves, placed in form of a cross, out of whose cup arises the pointal, which becomes a turnated fruit, having one celly, in which is inclosed an oblong seed, and two empty cells at the point. Booth.

GOLDBEATER, n. f. [gold and beat.] One whose occupation is to beat or foliate gold so as to gild other matters, they are Our goldbeaters, though, for their own profit sake, they are wont to use the finest common gold they can get, yet they are wont to employ coined gold; and that the manufacturers are not to alloy with copper or silver, to make the coin more stiff, and less subject to be wasted by attrition. Booth.

This gilder was a goldbeater. Pope.

GOLDBEATER'S Skin, n. f. The intestine return of 20, 25, which goldbeaters lay between the leaves of their metal while they beat it, whereby the membrane is relaxed thin, and made fit to apply to cuts or small flesh wounds, as is now the common practice. Booth.

When your gilliflowers blow, if they break the pot, you it with a penknife or lancet at each division, as low as the flower has burst it, and bid it about with a narrow lig of goldbeater's skin, which moults with your ungues, and is well licked together. Booth.

GOLDBOUND, adj. [gold and bound.] Encompassed with gold.
Thy air,
Thou other goldbound brow, is like the fist. Shakspeare.

GOLDS, ad. [from gold.]

1. Made of gold; containing of gold.

O would to God that the inclusive verge
Of golden metal, that must roas'd my brow,
Were red hot steel to scar me to the brain.
Nine royal knights in equal rank succed,
Each warrior mounted on a fiery steed,
In golden armour glorious to behold.

Shakep.

The rivets of their arms were nail'd with gold.
The rivets, bright, splendid, resplendent,
To sweet a kiss the golden fan gives not
To those fresh morning drops upon the rose;
Nor dainties the silver noose one half to bright
Through the transparent bosom of the deep.

Dryd.

Shakepeare.

'Tis better to be lowly born
And range with humble lives in content,
Than to be perik'd up in a glittering grief,
And wear a golden sorrow.
Heaven's gold'n winged herald late he saw
To a poor Gallican virgin sent.

Shakepeare.

Craffaw.

To her hard yoke you must hereafter bow,
How'er the thins all golden to you now.
And see the guardian angels of the good,
Reclining foot on many a golden cloud.

Dryden.

Rowe.

Yellow; of the colour of gold.
Gilda sufficing hath a gold coloured coat under a russet hair, and its flesh of a yellow colour.

Mortimer.

4. Excellent; valuable.
I have bought
Golden opinions from all sort of people,
Which would be worn now in their newest gloss,
Not call'd aside to loom.

Shakepeare.

Dryden.

Thence arises that golden rule of dealing with others as we would have others deal with us.

Watts.

5. Happy; remembering the age of gold.
They say many young gentlemen flock to him every day, and fleet the time carelessly, as they did in the golden world.

Shakepeare.

GOLDEN Saxifrage. n. f. [hyssopus aureus.]
It hath a perennial fibrous root: the flowercup is divided into four parts: the flower has no visible petals, but eight filamina, or threads, which surround the ovary: the pointal becomes a membranous vessel, which is forked and bivalve, inclosing many small seeds. It grows wild upon marshy soil, and in shady woods.

Miller.

GOLDENLY. adv. [from golden.] Delightfully; splendidly.
My brother Jaques, he keeps at school, and report speaks goldenly of his progress.

Shakepeare.

A little gondole, bedecked trim
With boughs and arbours woven cunningly.
In a gondola were seen together Lorenzo and his amorous Jessica.

Stenfer.

Shakepeare.

As with gend le's and men, his Good excellence the duke of Venice
Sails out, and gives the gulph a ring.

Prier.

GUNPOLLER. n. f. [from gondola.] A boatman; one that rows a gondola.

Your fair daughter,
Transported with no worse nor better guard,
But with a knave of hire, a gondolier,
To the grols claps of a lascivious Moor.

Shakepeare.

His rival gor'd in every knotty trunk. Temple.

GORGE. n. f. [gorge, French.]

1. The throat; the iawallow.

There were birds also made so finely, that they did not only deceive the fight with their figures, but the hearing of their songs, which the watry instruments did make them appear to live. Isaac.

And now how abhorred in my imagination it is! Isaac.
rises at it.

Her delicate tenderness will find itself shod, by no
heave the gorge, discomfited and abhor the Moor. Shakespeare.

2. That which is gorged or swallowed.

And all the way, most like a bruith beast,
He spewed up his gorge, that all did him detest. Spenser.

To GORGE. v. a. [gorger, French.]

1. To fill up to the throat; to glut; to satiate.

Thou detestable maw, thou womb of death,
Gorg'd with the dearest morsel of the earth. Shakespeare.

Being with his presence glutted, gor'd, and full, Isaac.
He that makes his generation messes,

To gorge his appetite. Shakespeare.

Gee ge with my blood thy barbarous appetite Dryden.
I must therefore declare, that they will not gorge him either with nonsense or obsequy. Isaac.

Nor would his slaughter'd army now have lain
On Africa's sands, disgrac'd with their wounds,
To gorge the wolves and vultures of Numidia. Isaac.

The giant, gor'd with flesh, and wine, and blood,
Lay stretch'd at length, and snoring in his bed. Isaac.

2. To swallow; as, the fish has gorged the bait.

GO'RGEOUS. adj. [gorgeus, old French. Stimé.] For; splendid; glittering in various colours; thony; magnificent.

while the kite is hovering over their heads. Swift.

2. A cat's tail on nut-trees and pines.

GO'SPEL. n. f. [gospel, ypel, or God's or good tidings; euangelion; gospel, gospel, happy tidings, Erse.]

1. God's word; the holy book of the Christian revelation.

Thus may the gospel to the rising sun

Be spread, and flourish where it first begun. Waller.

How is a good Christian animated and cheered by a steadfast belief of the promises of the gospel? Bentley.

2. Divinity; theology.

To GO'SPEL. v. n. [from the noun.] To fill with sentiments of religion. This word in Shakespeare, in whom alone I have found it, is used, though so venerable in itself, with some degree of irony: I suppose from the gossellers, who had long been held in contempt.

Are you to gospell d

To pray for this good man, and for his issue,

While heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave? Shaksp.

GO'SPILER. n. f. [from gospel.] A name of the followers of Wickliffe, who first attempted a reformation from popery, given them by the papists in reproach, from their professing to follow and preach only the gospel.

Have trodden down our holy Roman faith. Rew.

GO'SPAMER. n. f. [gospium, low Lat.] The down of plants; the long white cobwebs which fly in the air in calm sunny weather, especially about the time of autumn. Hammer.

A lover may bedrill the gospamer,

That idles in the wanton summer air,

And yet not fall, so light is vanity. Shakespeare.

Had'st thou been taught but gospamer, feathers, air,

So many fathom down precipitating, Shakespeare.

Thou'd'st shiver'd like an egg.

Four nimble gnats the hoties were,

Their harness'd of gospamer. Dryden.

The fish gospamer now sits no more,

Nar helyous bath on the short sunny shore. Dryden.

GO'SSIP. n. f. [from goss and gib, relation, affinity, Saxon.]

1. One who answers for the child in baptism.

Go to a gossip's feast and gaude with me,

After to long grief such nativity: Shakespeare.

—With all my heart, I'll gossip at this feast.

At the christening of George duke of Clarence, who was born in the castle of Dublin, he made both the earl of Kildare and the earl of Ormond his gossips. Davies.

2. A rippling companion.

And sometimes lurk I in a gossip's bowl,

In very likeness of a roasted crab, Shakespeare.

And when the drinks against her lips I bob.

3. One who runs about tattling like women at a lying-in.

To do the office of a neighbour,

And be a gossip at his labour. Hudibras.

Th' sung in every street,

The common chat of gossips when they meet. Dryden.

Nº LXIV.

To GO'SUP. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To chat; to prate; to be merry.

Go to a gossip's feast and gaude with me.

—With all my heart, I'll gossip at this feast. Shakespeare.

'His mother was a votress of my order,

And, in the spiced Indian air by night,

Full often hath the gossip by my side. Shakespeare.

The market and exchange must be left to their own ways of talking; and gossippings not be robbed of their ancient privilege. Luthe.

2. To be a pot-companion.

Not met with fortune, other than at feasts,

Full warm of blood, of mirth, of gossipping. Shakespeare's King John.

GO'SSIPRED. n. f. [gossipy, from gossip.]

Gossipred or compaterity, by the canon law, is a spiritual affinity; and the juror, that was gossip to either of the parties, might, in former times, have been challenged as not indifferent. Davies.

GO'STING. n. f. An herb.

GOT. part. [from the verb get.]

Titus Lartius writes, they fought together; but Aufidius get off. Shakespeare.

If you have strength Achilles' arms to bear,

Though foul Theristes get thee, thou shalt be

Lo'd and esteem'd. Dryden.

These regions and this realm my wars have get;

This mournful empire is the loser's lot. Dryden.

When they began to reason about the means how the sea get thither, and away back again, there they were presently in the dark. Steward.

GOT. part. pass. of get.

Solyman commended them for their valour in their evil hours, in a plot so well by them laid, more than he did the victory of others get by good fortune, not grounded upon any good reason. Kneller.

Let him boast

His knowledge of good lost, and evil get. Milton.

A gentle persuasion in reasoning, when the first point of submission to your will is get, will most times do. Luthe.

If he behaves himself so when he depends on us for his daily bread, can any man say what he will do when he is get above the world? Arbutnot.

Thou wert from Atna's burning entrails torn,

Get by fierce whirlwinds, and in thunder born. Pope.

GO'TTEN. part. pass. of get.

GOVE. n. f. A mow.

To GOVE. v. n. To mow; to put in a gove, goff, or mow.

An old word.

Load safe, carry home, follow time being fair,

Gove just in the barn, it is out of despair. Tusser.

To GOVERN. v. a. [gouverner, French; gubernare, Latin.]

1. To rule as a chief magistrate.

This inconvenience is more hard to be redressed in the government than the governed; as a malady in a vital part is more incurable than in an external. Spenser.

Slaves to our passions we become, and then

It grows impossible to govern men. Waller.

2. To regulate; to influence; to direct.

The welfare of that is the chief point, which he is to carry always in his eye, and by which he is to govern all his counsels, designs, and actions. Atterbury.

GOVERNMENT: n. f. [gouvernement, French.]

1. Form of a community with respect to the disposition of the supreme authority.

There seem to be but two general kinds of government in the world: the one exercised according to the arbitrary commands and will of some single person; and the other according to certain orders or laws introduced by agreement or custom, and not to be changed without the consent of many.

Temple.

2. An establishment of legal authority.

There they shall found

Their government, and their great senate chuse

Through the twelve tribes, to rule by laws ordain'd.

Milton.

While he survives, in concord and content

The commons live, by no divisions rent;

But the great monarch's death dissolves the government.

Dryden.

Every one knows, who has considered the nature of government, that there must be in each particular form of it an absolute unlimited power.

Addison.

Where any one person or body of men seize into their hands the power in the last resort, there is properly no longer a government, but what Aristotle and his followers call the abuse or corruption of one.

Swift.

3. Administration of public affairs.

Safety and equal government are things

Which subjects make as happy as their kings.

Waller.

4. Regularity of behaviour.

You needs must learn, lord, to amend this fault;

Though sometimes it shews greatness, courage, blood,

Yet oftentimes it doth present harsh rage,

Defect of manners, want of government,

Pride, haughtiness, opinion and disdain.

Shakespeare.

'Tis government that makes them seem divine;

The want thereof makes thee abominable.

Shakespeare.

5. Manageableness; compliance; obsequiousness.

Thy eyes windows fall,

Like death, when he shuts up the day of life;

Each part depriv'd of supple government,

Shall stiff and flake, and cold appear, like death.

Shakespeare.

6. Management of the limbs or body. Obsolete.

Their god

Shot many a dart at me with fierce intent;

But I them warded all with wary government.

His reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff. Shakepeare.

Lest them pronounce the sleep Tarpian death,
Vagabond exile, slaying, pent to linger
But with a grain a day, I would not buy
Their mercy at the price of one fair word. Shakepeare.
Many of the ears, being six inches long, had sixty grains in them, and none less than forty. Mortimer.

2. Corn.

As it ebbs, the seedman

Upon the slime and ooze scatters his grain,

And shortly comes to harvest. Shakepeare.

Pales no longer swell'd the teeming grain,

Nor Phœbus fed his oxen on the plain. Dryden.

'Tis a rich soil, I grant you; but often covered with weeds than grain. Collier.

3. The seed of any fruit.

4. Any minute particle; any single body.

Thou exist'st on many thousand grains

That issue out of dust. Shakepeare.

By intelligence

And proofs as clear as founts in July, when

We see each grain of gravel. Shakepeare.

5. The smallest weight, of which in physics twenty make a scruple, and in Troy weight twenty-four make a pennyweight; a grain so named because it is supposed of equal weight with a grain of corn.

They began at a known body, a barley-corn, the weight whereof is therefore called a grain; which arithmetically, being multiplied, to scruples, drachms, ounces and pounds. Helder.

The trial being made betwixt lead and lead, weighing severally seven drachms, in the air; the balance in the water weigheth only four drachms and forty-one grains, and abatech of the weight in the air two drachms and nineteen grains; the balance kept the same depth in the water as above said.

The wreaths his grandfere knew to reap

By active toil and military sweat. Pope.

2. Any ancestor, poetically.

Why should a man, whose blood is warm within, Sit like his grandfere cut in alabaster? Shakespeare.

Above the portal, ear'd in cedar wood, Plac'd in their ranks, their godlike grandfere stood. Dryden.

So mimic ancient wits at best,

As apes our grandfere in their doubts dress. Pope.

GRANDSON. n. f. [grand and son.] The son of a son or daughter.

Almighty Jove augment your wealthy store, Give much to you, and to his grandsons more. Dante.

Grandfathers in private families are not much observed to have great influence on their grandsons, and, I believe, they have much less among princes. Bayly.

GRANGE. n. f. [grange, French.] A farm: generally a town with a house at a distance from neighbours.

One, when he had got the inheritance of an uncles all grange, would needs sell it; and, to draw buyers, produced the virtues of it: nothing ever thrived on it, faith he, the trees were all blasted, the swine died of the measles, the cattle of the murrain, and the sheep of the rot; nothing was ever reared there, not a duckling or a goose. Bacon.

At the moated grange, resides this dejected Marston. Shakespeare.

The loose unletter'd hinds,

When for their teeming flocks and granges full In wanton dance they praise the bounteous Pan. Milton.

If the church was of their own foundation, they might chuse, the incumbent being once dead, whether they would put any other therein, unless, perhaps, the said church had people belonging to it; for then they must still maintain a curate; and of this sort were their granges and parishes. De-la-Beche.

GRANITE. n. f. [granit, Fr. from granum, Lat. because it is a thing as it were of grains, or small distinct particles.] A three composed of separate and very large concretions, rudely compacted together; of great hardness, giving fire with steel, and fermenting with acids, and imperfectly calcinable in a great fire. The hard white granite with black spots, commonly called moor-floze, forms a very firm, and though rude, yet beautifully variegated mass. It is found in immense quantities in Ireland, but not used there. In Cornwall and the adjacent counties it is found on the surface of the earth in great quantities, and brought in great quantities to London, where it is used for the steps of public buildings. Hard red granite, variegated with black and white, now called oriental granite, is valuable for its extreme hardness and beauty, and capable of a most elegant polish. It is common in Egypt and Arabia, and is also found in the West of England little inferior. The vulgar opinion of their being call out of various fragments of marble, because they appear compos'd of particles or granules of different colours, is easily confuted by an accurate inspection of the fracture and formation of those granules, the least and meanest of which no human art could ever compose, nor fire leave in the state in which we see them. A third sort of granite has a beautiful variegation of colours, red, white, black and yellow, and capable of an elegant polish: it is little inferior in beauty to the oriental granite, and there are immense tracts of it in Minorca. Detached nodules of it, two or three foot in circumference, are also frequent on the shores of Guernsey, from whence it is brought as ballast, and used in paving our streets.

Hi l.
Alabaster, marble of divers colours, both simple and mixed, the opulites, porphyry, and the granite. Wardward.
There are still great pillars of granite, and other fragments of this ancient temple. Adden.

GRANIVOROUS. adj. [from granum and vora, Lat.] Eating grain; living upon grain.

Granivorous birds, as a crane, upon the first peck of their bill, can distinguish the qualities of hard bodies, which the sense of men discerns not without matification. Brown.

Panick affords a soft demulcent nourishment, both for granivorous birds and mankind. Arbutnot.
GRANNAM n. f. [for grandam.] Grandmother. Only used in burlesque works.

Of my kind grannam told me, Tim, take warning. Gey.
To GRANT. v. a. [from granter, French, junior and Stinner; perhaps, as Minsheu thinks, from gratis, or rather from gratia or gratificor.]

1. To admit that which is not yet proved; to allow; to yield; to concede.

They gather out of Scripture general rules to be followed in making laws; and so, in effect, they plainly grant, that we ourselves may lawfully make laws for the church. Hooker.

Grant that the fates have firm'd, by their decree, The Trojan race to reign in Italy. Dryden.

Suppose, which yet I grant not, thy desire
A moment elder than my rival fire,
Can chance of seeing first thy tide prove? Dryden.

If he be one indifferent as to the present rebellion, they may take it for granted his complaint is the rage of a disappointed man. Adden.

2. To bestow something which cannot be claimed of right.
The God of Israel grant thee thy petition that thou hast asked of him. 1 Sam.

Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life. Acts.

Didst thou not kill this king?
—I grant ye.

—Dost grant me, hedgehog? Then God grant me too,
—Thou mayst't be damned for that wicked deed. Shakspeare.

He heard, and granted half his prayer;
The rest the winds dispers'd. Pope.

GRANT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of granting or bestowing.

2. The thing granted; a gift; a boon.
Courtiers juggle for a grant.

And when they break their friendship plead their want. Dry.
3. [In law.] A gift in writing of such a thing as cannot aptly be pass'd or conveyed by word only; as rent, reversions, services, advowsons in gross, common in gross, tithes, &c. or made by such persons as cannot give but by deed, as the king, and all bodies politic; which differences be often in speech neglected, and then is taken generally for every gift whatsoever, made of any thing by any person; and he that granteth it is named the grantor, and he to whom it is made the grantee. A thing is said to be in grant which cannot be assigned without deed. Cowell.

All the whole land is the queen's, unless there be some grant of any part thereof, to be shew'd from her majesty. Spenser.

4. Concession; admission of something in dispute.

But of this so large a grant, we are content not to take advantage. Hooker.

This grant destroys all you have urg'd before. Dryden.

GRANTABLE. adj. [from grant.] That which may be granted.

The office of the bishop's chancellor was grantable for life. Ayliffe.

GRANTEE. n. f. [from grant.] He to whom any grant is made.

To smother the way for popery in Mary's time, the grantees were confirmed by the pope in the possession of the abbey-lands. Swift.

A duplex querela shall not be granted under pain of suspension of the grantor from the execution of his office. Ayliffe.

GRANULARY. adj. [from granule.] Small and compact; resembling a small grain or seed.

Small-coal, with sulphur and nitre, proportionably mixed, tempered, and formed into granularly bodies, do make up that powder which is in use for guns. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To GRANULATE. v. n. [granuler, Fr. from granum, Latin.] To be formed into small grains.

The juice of grapes, inspissated by heat, granulates into sugar. Sparr.

To GRANULATE. v. a.

1. To break into small masses or granules.

2. To raise into small asperities.

I have observed, in many birds, the gullet, before its entrance into the gizzard, to be much dilated, and thick set, or as it were granulated with a multitude of glandules, each whereof was provided with its excretory vessel. Rey.

GRANULATION. n. f. [granulation, French, from granulate.]

1. The act of pouring melted metal into cold water, so as it may granulate or congeal into small grains: it is generally done through a colander, or a birchen broom. Gunpowder and some salts are likewise said to be granulated, from their resemblance to grain or seed. Quincy.

2. The act of floating or breaking into small masses.

Tents in wounds, by resisting the growth of the little granulations of the flesh, in process of time harden them, and in that manner produce a fistula. Shorp.

GRANULE. n. f. [from granum, Latin.] A small compact particle.

With an excellent microscope, where the naked eye did see but a green powder, the assisted eye could discern particular granules, some blue, and some yellow. Boyle.

GRANULOUS. adj. [from granule.] Full of little grains.

GRAPE. n. f. [grappe, French; krappe, Dutch.] The fruit of the vine, growing in clusters; the fruit from which wine is expressed.

And thou shalt not glean thy vineyard, neither shalt thou gather every grape of thy vineyard; thou shalt leave them for the poor and stranger. Lev.

Turn back thine hand, as the grape gatherers into the baskets. Jer.

Anacreon, for thy sake
I of the grape no mention make;
Ere my Anacreon by thee fell,
Curled plant, I lov'd thee well. Cowley.

Here are the vines in curly flow'r discri'd,
Here grapes discolour'd on the sunny side. Pope.

GRAPE HYACINTH, or GRAPE FLOWER. See MUSK.

GRAPESTONE. n. f. [grape and stone.] The stone or seed contained in the grape.

When obedient nature knows 'thill will,
A fly, a grapestone, or a hair can kill. Prior.

GRAPHICAL. adj. [γραφικω.] Well delineated.

Write with a needle, or bodkin, or knife, or the like, when the fruit or trees are young; for as they grow, so the letters will grow more large and graphical. Bacon.

GRAPHICALLY. adv. [from graphical.] In a picturesque manner; with good description or delineation.

The hyena odorata, or civet cat, is delivered and graphically described by Castellus. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

GRAPNEL. n. f. [grapin, French.]

1. A small anchor belonging to a little vessel.

2. A grappling iron with which in fight one ship fastens on another.

To GRAPPLE. v. n. [grabbelen, Dutch; krappen, German.]

1. To contend by seizing each other, as wrestlers.

They must be also practised in all the locks and grips of wrestling, as need may often be in fight to tugg or grapple, and to close. Milton.

Living virtue, all achievements past,
Meets envy, still to grapple with at last. Waller.

Does he think that he can grapple with divine vengeance, and endure the everlasting burnings? Sautb.

Antæus here and stern Alcides strive,
And both the grappling statues seem to live, Addison.

2. To contend in close fight.

I'll in my standard bear the arms of York,
To grapple with the house of Lancaster. Shakspeare.

Sometimes, from fighting squadrons of each fleet,
Two grappling Ænæas on the ocean meet,
And English fires with Belgian flames contend. Dryden.

To GRAPPLE. v. a.

1. To fasten; to fix; to join indissolubly. Now obsolete.

Grapple your minds to sterage of the navy,
And leave your England as dead midnight still. Shakspeare.

I will put that business in your bosoms,
Whose execution takes your enemy off,
Grapples you to the heart and love of us. Shakspeare.

2. To seize; to lay fast hold of.

GRAPPLE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Contend hand to hand, in which the combatants seize each other; the wrestlers hold.

As when earth's son, Antæus strove
With Jove's Alcides, and, oft foil'd, still rose Fresh.

Fresh from his fall, and fiercer grapple join'd,
Throttled at length in th' air, expir'd and fell. Milton.
Or did his genius

Know mine the stronger demon, fear'd the grapple,
And, looking round him, found this nook of fate,
To skulk behind my sword. Dryden.

2. Cloie fight.
In the grapple I boarded them; on the instant they got clear of our ship, so I alone became their prisoner. Shakespeare.
3. Iron instrument by which one ship fastens on another.
But Cymon loon his crooked grapple cast,
Which with tenacious hold his foes embrac'd. Dryden.
GRA'PPLEMENT. n. f. [from grapple.] Cloie fight; hostile embrace.

They catching hold of him, as down he lent,
Him backward overhrew, and down him flay'd
With their rude hands and grisly grapplement. Spenser.
GRA'SHOPPER. n. f. [grafi and hop.] A small insect that hops in the Summer grass. The cicada of the Latins, or cicada of the Italians, is often by the poets translated grashopper, but improperly.

Her waggon spokes made of long spinners legs,
The cover of the wings of grashoppers. Shakespeare.
Grashoppers eat up the green of whole countries. Racon.
Where silver lakes, with verdant shadows crown'd,
Disperse a grateful chineless all around;
'The grashopper avoids th' untainted air,
Nor in the midst of Summer ventures there. Addison.
The women were of such an enormous stature, that we appeared as grashoppers before them. Addison.

GRA'SIER. See GRAZIER.
To GRASP. v. a. [graspere, Italian.]

1. To hold in the hand; to gripe.
O fool that I am, that thought I could grasp water and bind the wind. Sidney.

In his right hand
Grasping ten thousand thunders, which he sent Before him, such as in their souls infix'd Plagues. Milton.

Kings, by grasping more than they could hold,
Firm made their subjects by oppression bold. Denham.
Doom, as they please, my empire not to stand,
I'll grasp my sceptre with my dying hand. Dryden.

2. To seize; to catch at.
This grasping of the militia of the kingdom into their own hands, was desired the Summer before. Clarendon.
To GRASP. v. n.

1. To catch; to endeavour to seize; to try at.
So endless and exorbitant are the desires of men, that they will grasp at all, and can form no scheme of perfect happiness with less. Swift.
2. To struggle; to strive; to grapple. Not now in use.
See, his face is black and full of blood;
His hands abroad display'd, as one that grapt
And tug'd for life. Shakespeare.
3. To gripe; to encroach.

Like a miser 'midst his store,
Who grasps and grasps 'till he can hold no more. Dryden.
GRASP. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The gripe or seizure of the hand.
Nor wanted in his grasp
What seem'd both spear and shield. Milton.

This hand and sword have been acquainted well;
It should have come before into my grasp,
'To kill the ravisher. Dryden.

The left arm is a little defaced, though one may see it held something in its grasp formerly. Addison.

2. Possession; hold.
I would not be the villain that thou think'st
For the whole space that's in the tyrants grasp,
And the rich East to boot. Shakespeare.
3. Power of seizing.

The trade of beef for foreign exportation was prejudiced, and almost sunk; for the feth being young, and only grafi fed, was thin, light and moist, and not of a substance to endure the salt, or be preserved by it, for long voyages, or a slow consumption. Temple.

You'll be no more your former you;
But for a blooming nymph will pass,
Just fifteen, coming Summer's grafi. Swift.

GRASS OF PARNASSUS. n. f. [parnassios, Latin.]

It hath a rose-shaped flower of five large leaves, and five small at the bottom fringed, of a greenish colour, and fire orbicularly: out of the flower-cup arises the point, which turns to an oval membranaceous fruit, having but one cell filled with seeds. This plant grows wild in most mountains, particularly in the North. It is called parnassios from mount Parnassus, where it was supposed to grow; and because the cattle feed on it, it obtained the name of grafi, though the plant has no resemblance to the grafi kind. Misc.

To GRASS. v. n. [from the noun.] To breed grafi; to browse pasture.

I gratulate at least my native clime,

That such a land, which such a monster bore,

So far is distant from our Thracian shore. Dryden.

2. To declare joy for.

Yet give thy jealous subjects leave to doubt,

Who thus thy 'scape from rumour gratulate,

No less than if from peril; and devout,

Do beg thy care unto thy after state. Ben. Jonson.

GRATULATION. n. f. [from gratulari, Latin.] Salutations made by expressing joy; expression of joy.

They are the full gratulations wherewith our Lord and Saviour was joyfully received at his entrance into the world, by such as in their hearts, arms, and bowels embraced him. Richard.

The earth

Gave signs of gratulation, and each hill. Milton.

Your enjoyments, according to the standard of a Christian desire, are so complex that they require no addition: I shall turn my wishes into gratulations, and, congratulating their fulfill, only with their continuance. South.

To th' more mature,

A glass that featur'd them ; and to the grave,

A child that guided dotards. Shakespeare.

We should have else desir'd

Your good advice, which still hath been both grave

And prosperous, in this day's council. Shakespeare.

That grave awfulness, as in your best breed of matives, or elegance and prettiness, as in your lesser dogs, are modes of beauty. Mere.

Even the grave and serious characters are distinguished by their several sorts of gravity. Dryden.

Youth on silent wings is flown ;

Græu years come rolling on. Prior.

To laugh, were want of goodness and of grace ;

And to be grave, exceeds all pow'r of face. Pope.

Folly-painting humour, grave himself,

Calts laughter forth. Thomson.

To GRAVITATE. v. n. [from gravis, Latin.] To tend to the center of attraction.

I hope who have nature's steps with care pursued,

That matter is with active force endu'd ;

That all its parts magnetick pow'r exert,

And to each other gravitate, affect. Newton.

That subtle matter must be of the same substance with all other matter, and as much as is comprehended within a particular body must gravitate jointly with that body. Bacon.

GRAVITATION. n. f. [from gravitate.] Act of tending to the centre.

The most considerable phenomenon belonging to terrestrial bodies is the general action of gravitation, whereby all gravitate bodies, in the vicinity of the earth, do tend and press towards its centre. Newton.

When the loose mountain trembles from on high,

Shall gravitation cease, if you go by ? Pope.

GRAVITY. n. f. [gravitas, Latin ; gravis, French.]

1. Weight ; heaviness ; tendency to the centre.

That quality by which all heavy bodies tend towards the centre of the earth, accelerating their motion the nearer they approach towards it, true philosophy has shown to be unobtainable by any hypothesis, and resolved it into the immensity of the Creator. Of all bodies, considered within the action of any fluid, there is a twofold gravity, true and absolute, and apparent, vulgar or comparative : absolute gravity is the whole force by which any body tends downwards ; but the relative or vulgar is the excess of gravity in one body above the specific gravity of the fluid, whereby it tends downwards more than the ambient fluid doth. Newton.

Bodies do swim or sink in different liquors, according to the tenacity or gravity of those liquors which are to support them. Newton.

Though this increase of density may at great distances be exceeding flow, yet if the elastic tone of their medium be exceeding exceeding great, it may suffice to impel bodies from the denser parts of the medium towards the rarer, with all that power which we call gravity. Newton.

2. Atrociousness; weight of guilt.

No man could ever have thought this reasonable, that had intended thereby only to punish the injury committed, according to the gravity of the fact. Hobbes.

Great Cato there, for gravity renowned. Dryden.

The emperors often jested on their rivals or predecessors, but their minds still maintained their gravity. Addison.

GRA'VY. n. f. The ferous juice that runs from flesh not much dried by the fire.

They usually boil and roast their meat until it falls almost off from the bones; but we love it half raw, with the blood trickling down from it, delicately terming it the gray, which in truth looks more like an ichorous or raw bloody matter. Harvey.

There may be a stronger broth made of vegetables than of any gray soup. A-bu-bet.

GRAY. adj. [græ, Saxon; græn, Danish; græau, Dutch.]

1. White with a mixture of black.

They left me then, when the gray headed even,

Like a sad vorarist in palmer's weed,

Rose from the hindmost wheels of Phœbus' wain. Milton.

These gray and dun colours may be also produced by mixing whites and blacks, and by consequence differ from perfect whites, not in species of colours, but only in degree of luminousness. Newton.

2. White or hoary with old age.

Living creatures generally do change their hair with age, turning to be gray; as is seen in men, though some earlier and some later; in horses, that are dappled and turn white; in old squirrels that turn grilly, and many others. Bacon.

Thou hast neither forsaken me now I am become gray headed, nor suffered me to forsake thee in the late days of temptation. Walton.

Anon

Gray headed men and grave, with warriors mix'd,

Affable. Milton.

The restoration of gray hairs to juvenility, and renewing the exhausted marrow, may be effected. Glau.

Art thou to learn that in another's god

Lie charms resistless? Dryden.

We most of us are grown gray headed in our dear service. Addison.

Her gray hair'd synods damning books unread,

And Bacon trembling for his brazen head. Pope.

3. Dark like the opening or close of day; of the colour of ashes. Our women's names are more gracious than their gray, that is, gray eyed. Cælia, Camden.

The gray ey'd morn smiles on the frowning night,

Chequ'ring the eastern clouds with streaks of light. Shak.

Ill pay you gray is not the morning's eye;

'Tis but the pale reflects of Cynthia's brow. Shaksp.

Sonn: the gray ey'd morning streaks the skies,

And in the doubtful day the woodcock flies. Gay.

GRAY. n. f. A badger.

To be afraid to tell graybeards the truth? Shakespeare.

GRA'YHOUND. See GREYHOUND.

GRA'YLING. n. f. The umber, a fish.

The grayling lives in such rivers as the trout does, and is usually taken with the same baits, and after the same manner: he is of a fine shape, his flesh white, and his teeth, those little ones that he has, are in his throat. He is not so general a fish as the trout, nor so good to eat. Walton.

GRAYNESS. n. f. [from gray.] The quality of being gray.

1. To eat grass; to feed on grass.

The greatest of my pride is to see my ewes graze and my lambs suck. Shakespeare.

Graz where you will, you shall not house with me. Shak.

Leaving in the fields his grazing cows,

He sought himself some hospitable house. Dryden.

The more ignoble throng

Attend the stately sleighs, and slowly graze along. Dryden.

2. To supply grass.

Physicians advise their patients to remove into airs which are plain champagnes, but grazing, and not overgrown with beath. Bacon.

The fowlers must be kept so as the water may not stay too long in the spring; for then the ground continueth the wet, whereby it will never graze to purpose that year. Bacon.

A third sort of grazing ground is that near the sea, which is commonly very rich land. Martinet.

3. To move on devouring.

As every flate lay next to the other that was oppressed, so the fire perpetually grazed. Bacon.

4. [from razer, French.] To touch lightly.

Mark then a bounding valour in our English,
That being dead, like to the bullets grazing,
Breaks out into a second curse of mischief,
Killing in rapale of mortality. Shakespeare.

TO GRAZE. v. a.

1. To tend grazing cattle; to set cattle to feed on grass.

Jacob graz'd his uncle Laban's sheep. Shakespeare.

O happy man, faith he, that, lo! I see

Grazing his cattle in those pleasant fields,

If he but know his good!

The chief beheld their chariots from afar; Daniel.

Their steeds around,

Free from their harness, graze the flow'ry ground. Dryden.

Grounds graze well the next year after plowing. Motimer.

Some graze their land 'till Christmas, and some longer. Mort.

And all thy friends, which thou must make thy friends,

Have but their things and teeth newly ta'en out. Shakespeare.

In a vault,

Where bloody Tybalt, yet but green in earth,

Lies festering in his blood. Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet.

- A man that studieth revenge keeps his own wounds green, which otherwife would heal and do well. Bacon's Essays.

5. Not dry.

If a spark of error have thus far prevailed, falling even where the wood was green, and farthest off from any inclination unto furios attempts; must not the peril thereof be greater in men, whose minds are of themselves as dry fuel, apt beforehand unto tumults? Hunter, Dedication.

Of fragility the cause is an impotency to be extended, and therefore stone is more fragil than metal, and so dry wood is more fragil than green. Bacon's Natural History.

If you but consider a piece of green wood burning in a chimney, you will readily discern, in the disband'd parts of it, the four elements. Boyle.

The green do often heat the ripe, and the ripe, so heated, give fire to the green. Mortimer's Husbandry.

6. Not roasted; half raw.

Under this head we may rank those words which signify different ideas, by a sort of an unaccountable far-fetched analogy, or distant resemblance, that fancy has introduced between one thing and another; as when we say the meat is green, when it is half roasted. Watts's Logic.

7. Unripe; immature; young: because fruits are green before they are ripe.

My fallid days,

When I was green in judgment, cold in blood!

O charming youth, in the first op'ning page;

So many graces in so green an age. Dryden.

You'll find a difference

Between the promise of his greener days,

And these he masters now. Shakespeare, Henry V.

- If you would fast green geese, shut them up when they are about a month old. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Stubble geese at Michaelmas are seen

Upon the spit: next May produces green. King's Cookery.

know by the freezing of a moistened cloth set in your green- houses, kindle some charcoal. Evelyn's Kalendar.

Sometimes our road led us into several hollow apartments

among the rocks and mountains, that look like so many natural greenhouses, as being always shaded with a great variety of trees and shrubs that never lose their verdure. Addison.

A kitchen garden is a more pleasant sight than the finest orangery or artificial greenhouse. Speiser.

- GREYISH. adj. [from green.] Somewhat green; tending to green.

With goodly greyish locks, all loose, unt'y'd,

As each had been a bride. Speyer's Prentiss.

Of this order the green of all vegetables seems to be, partly by reason of the intenseness of their colours, and partly because, when they wither, some of them turn to a greyish yellow.

Newton's Opticks.

- GREENLY. adj. [from green.]

1. With a greenish colour.

2. Newly; freshly.

3. Immaturely.

have I cunning in prostitution. Shakespeare, Henry V.

GREYNESS. n. s. [from green.]

1. The quality of being green; viridity; viridities.

About it grew such sort of trees, as either excellency of fruit, flatness of growth, continual greyness, or poetical fancies have made at any time famous. Sidney.

In a meadow, though the meer grass and greyness delights, yet the variety of flowers doth heighten and beautify. B. Johnson.

My reason, which discourses on what it finds in my phantasy, can consider greyness by itself, or mellowness, or sweetness, or coldness, singly and alone by itself. Digby on Bodies.

2. Immaturity; unripeness.

This prince, while yet the errors in his nature were excused by the greyness of his youth, which took all the fault upon itself, loved a private man's wife. Sidney.

3. Freshness; vigour.

'Take the picture of a man in the greyness and vivacity of his youth, and in the latter date and declension of his drooping years, and you will scarce know it to belong to the same person.

Swiss's Sermon.

4. Newness.

GREYNESS. n. s. [green and sickness.] The disease of maids, so called from the paleness which it produces.

Sour eruptions, and a craving appetite, especially of terrestful and absorbent substances, are the case of girls in the greyness. Arbutnot.

GREYNSWARD. } n. s. [green and sward.] of the same original

That to the greenwood shade he took his way;
For Cymon thunn'd the church.

Dryden's Cymon and Iphigenia.
TO GREET. v. a. [grater, Latin; greetan, Saxon.]

1. To address at meeting.
I think if men, which in these places live,
Durst look in themselves, and themselves retrieve,
They would like strangers greet themselves. Donne.
I would gladly go,
To greet my Pallas with such news below. Dryden.

2. To address in whatever manner.
My noble partner
You greet with present grace, and great prediction;
To me you speak not. Shaksp. Macbeth.
Now, Thomas Mowbray, do I turn to thee,
And mark my greeting well; for what I speak,
My body shall make good. Shaksp. Richard II.
3. To salute in kindness or respect.
My lord, the mayor of London comes to greet you.
—God bless your grace with health and happy days. Shaksp. Henry.

- Now the herald lark
Left his ground nest, his gravel tow'ring to defy
The morn's approach, and greet her with his song. Milton.
Once had the early matrons run
To greet her of a lovely son. Milton.
The sea's our own; and now all nations greet,
With bending sails, each vessel of our fleet. Wallar.
'Tis pale they meet, their eyes with fury burn;
None greet; for none the greeting will return;
But in dumb silence, each arm'd with care,
His foe profest, as brother of the war. Dryden's Fables.

4. To congratulate.
His lady, seeing all that channel from far,
Approach in haste to greet his victorie. Fairy Queen.
5. To pay compliments at a distance.
The king's a-bed,
And sent great largess to your officers;
This diamond he grets you with his wishal,
By the name of most kind hostess. Shaksp. Macbeth.
6. To meet, as those do who go to pay congratulations. Not much in use.

Your haste
Is now urg'd on you.
— We will greet the time. Shaksp. King Lear.
Such was that face on which I dwellt with joy,
Ere Greece accomplish'd them'd the tides to Troy;
But parting then for that detested shore,
Our eyes, unhappy! never greeted more. Pope's Odyssey.

TO GREET. v. n. To meet and salute.
There greet in silence, as the dead are wont,
And sleep in peace. Shaksp. Henry.

GREET. n. f. [from the verb.] He who greets.

1. Sorrow; trouble for something past.

I will instruct my sorrows to be proud;
For grief is proud, and makes his owner stout. Shaksp. Henry.

Wringing of the hands, knocking the breast, or wailing one's self unborn, are but the ceremonies of sorrow, the play and ostentation of an effeminate grief, which speaks weakness and the greatness of the misery as the smallness of the mind. Shaksp. King Lear.

The mother was so afflicted at the loss of a son, who was her only son, that she died for grief of it. Shaksp. King Lear.

GRIEVANCE; harm. [Grief, French.]
Be factious for redress of all these grievs,
And I will fet this foot of mine as far
As who goes farthest. Shaksp. Henry.

The king hath sent to know
The nature of your grievs, and whereupon
You conjure from the breast of civil peace
Such bold hostility? Shaksp. Henry.

3. Pain; disease.
GRIEVANCE. n. f. [from grief.]
1. A state of uneasiness. Out of use.

2. The cause of uneasiness. Used of such causes as are the effects of human conduct.

What remedy can be found against grievances, but to bring religion into countenance, and encourage those who, from the hope of future reward, and dread of future punishment, will be moved to justice and integrity? Shaksp. King Lear.

TO GRIEVE. v. a. [grevre, French; griever, Flemish; grievare, Latin.] To afflict; to hurt.

Shakspeare.

GRIN. n. f. [from the verb.] The act of closing the teeth and shewing them.

He laughs at him: in's face too.

—O you mistake him; 'twas an humble grin,

The fawning joy of courtiers and of dogs.

Dryden.

The muskies were so drawn together on each side of his face, that he shewed twenty teeth at a grin.

Addison.

Deaths are effectually beaten in all their combats at the weapons of men, that is, reason and argument; and they would now attack our religion with the talents of a vile animal, that is, grin and grimace.

It att.

GRIN. n. f. [grin, grylene, Saxon.] A snare; a trap.

Like

Like a bird that hatches to his gryns, Clawer.
Not knowing the peril.
The gryn shall take him by the heel, and the robber shall prevail against him. Job.

To GRIND, v. a. preter. I ground; part. pass. ground. [grin- ban, grunnen, ground, Saxon.]

1. To reduce any thing to powder by friction; to comminute by attrition.

And whosoever shall fall on this stone, shall be broken; but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder. Mat.
He that will have a cake out of the wheat, must needs tarry the grinding. Shakspeare.

What relation or affinity is there between a minute body and cogitation, any more than the greatest? Is a small drop of rain any wiser than the ocean? Or do we grind inanimate corn into living and rational meal? Bentley.

2. To sharpen or smooth by rubbing on something hard.

Meeting with time, slack thing, said I,
Thy fish is dull; whet it, for flame:
No marvel, sir, he did reply,

If it at length deserve some blame;
But where one man would have me grind it,
Twenty for one too sharp do find it. Herbert.

Against a stump his tusk the monster grinds, Dryd.
And in the sharpen'd edge new vigour finds.

That the stomach in animals grinds the substances which it receives, is evident from the dissection of animals, which have swallowed metals, which have been found polished on the side next the stomach. Arbuthnot.

On the hard rock, and give a wheely form
To the expected grinder. Phillips.

3. [Quinto-today.] The back teeth; the double teeth.

The teeth are in men of three kinds: sharp, as the fore-teeth; broad, as the back-teeth, which we call the molar-teeth, or grinders; and pointed teeth, or canine, which are between both. Bacon.

He the raging lioness confounds,
The roaring lion with his javelin wounds;
Scatters their whelps, their grinders break; so they
With the old hunter starve for want of prey. Sandys.

The jaw teeth or grinders, in Latin molars, are made flat and broad a-top, and wishal somewhat uneven and rugged, that, by their knobs and little cavities, they may the better retain, grind, and commix the aliments. Ray.

Nature is at a great deal of labour to transmute vegetable into animal substances; therefore herb-eating animals, which don't ruminate, have strong grinders, and chew much. Arb.

4. The teeth, in irony or contempt.

One, who at sight of supper, open'd wide
His jaws before, and whetted grinders try'd. Dryd.

Both I brought
He mouth'd them, and betwix his grinders caught. Dryd.

GRINDSTONE, n. f. [from grind and stone.] The stone

GRINDSTONE, } on which edged instruments are sharpened.

Such a light and metall'd dance
Saw you never yet in France;
And by the lead-men, for the nonce,
That turn round like grindstones,
Which they dig out 'fro' the dells,
For their bairns bread, wives and fells. B. Johnson.

Literature is the grindstone to sharpen the coulters, and to whet their natural faculties. Hammond.

Smiths that make hinges brighten them, yet seldom file them; but grind them on a grindstone 'till bright. Mem.

And first the dame came rushing through the wood;
And next the famish'd hounds that fought their food,
And grip'd her flanks, and oft essay'd their jaws in blood. Dryden's Fables.

To GRIPPE, v. n. To pinch the belly; to give the colic.

Thus full of counsel to the den the went,
Grip'd all the way, and longing for a vent.

Many people would, with reason, prefer the gripes of an hungry belly to those dishes which are a feast to others. Lake.

Manna, by the bulk, figure, texture and motion of its parts, has a power to produce the sensations of colic, and sometimes of acute pains or gripings in us. Lake.

GRIPPE, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Grasp; hold; seizure of the hand or paw.

Therefore still on high
He over him did hold his cruel claws,
Threatning with greedy gripes to do him dy.

They put a bar en scepie in my gripe,
Thence to be wrench'd with an unlied hand. Shakspeare.

Should I
Slaver with lips, as common as the stairs
That mount the Capitol; join gripes with hands
Made hardy with hourly falsehood as with labour. Shakspeare.

He gave me his hand,
And, with a feeble gripe, says, dear, my lord,
Command my service.

I fell; and with my weight the helm constrain'd,
Was drawn along, which yet my gripe retain'd. Dryden.

2. Squeeze; pressure.

Fir'd with this thought, at once he strain'd the breast;
'Tis true, the harden'd breast refills the gripes,
And the cold lips return a kiss unripe. Dryden.

Grip-samer steam'd. Alton.

GRIS, n. f. [See GREEZE, as it should be written.] A step or scale of steps.

Let me speak like myself; and lay a sentence,
Which, as a grip or step, may help thee lovers
Into your favour. Shakspeare.

GRISKIN, n. f. [griglin, roast meat, Irish.] The ventricle of a hog broiled.

GRISLY, adj. [grigylu, Saxon.] Dreadful; horrible; hideous; frightful; terrible. Ho.

His grifly locks, long grown and unbound,
Disordered hung about his shoulders round.

Where I was wont to seek the honey-bee,
The grifly toadstool grown there might I see.

My grifly countenance made others fly;
None durst come near, for fear of sudden death.

Back fled'd thiefe two fair angels, half amaz'd
So fuddeu to behold the grifly king;

Yet thus, unmov'd with fear, accost him soon.
For that damn'd magician, let him be girt

With all the grifly legions that troop
Under the footy fairs of Acheron.

The beauteous form of fight
Is chang'd, and war appears a grifly light.

In vision thou shalt see his grifly face,
The king of terrors, raging in thy race.

Thus the grifly spectre spoke again,
Close by each other laid, they press'd the ground;

Their manly bosoms pierc'd with many a grifly wound.

So rushes on his foe the grifly bear.

GRIST. n. f. [grist, Saxon.]

1. Corn to be ground.

Get grist to the mill to have plenty in store,
Left miller lack water.

A mighty trade this luffly miller drove;
Much grist from Cambridge to his lot did fall,

And all the corn they us'd at Scholars-hall. Miller of Tresp.

2. Supply; provision.

wont to be made according to the rules of that law, because it brings grist to the mill.

GRISTLE. n. f. [gristle, Saxon.] A cartilage; a part of the body next in hardness to a bone.

No living creatures, that have shells very hard, as oysters, crabs, lobsters, and especially the tortoise, have any bones within them, but only little gristles.

Left the asperity or hardness of these cartilages should hurt the oesophagus or gullet, which is tender and of a skinny substance, or hinder the swallowing of our meat, therefore these annular gristles are not made round, or intire circles; but where the gullet touches the windpipe, there, to fill up the circle, is only a soft membrane, which may easily give way to the dilatation of the gullet.

GRISTLY. adj. [from gristle.] Cartilaginous; made of gristle.

At last they spit out pieces of their lungs; it may be small gristly bits, that are eaten off from the lung-pipes.

She has made the back-bone of several vertebrae, as being more fit to bend, more tough, and less in danger of breaking, than if they were all one intire bone without these gristly junctures.

Fins are made of gristly spokes, or rays connected by membranes; so that they may be contracted or extended like womans fans.

They have a louder and stronger note than other birds of the same bigness, which have only a gristly windpipe.

Each pipe, distinguish'd by its gristly rings,
To cherish life aerial pasture brings.

GRIT. n. f. [grizza, grout, Saxon.]

1. The coarse part of meal.

2. Oats hulled, or coarsely ground.
